Abstract

Roving librarians circulate within the reference area to offer assistance to users at workstations. Dramatic increases in the numbers of electronic resources call for roving as an effective way to offer on-site assistance. Many libraries offer roving, but note some problems: invasion of users' privacy, reluctance of some librarians to rove, predominance of basic technical questions, etc. Overall, librarians report that users appreciate the service, and many libraries are trying to move toward more formal implementations of roving. The authors summarize points raised in a recent discussion on roving on LIBREF-L and offer reasons why librarians should rove.

Introduction

The rapid expansion of the Web and other electronic resources has led libraries to reconsider traditional methods of providing reference services. The reference desk has been, and in many ways still is, the service center of the reference department. The desk serves as the focal point for users and a base of operations for librarians. However, the impact of electronic information sources and the growing number of public workstations is challenging this traditional view. It is becoming more common for library users to find dictionaries, encyclopedias, periodical indexes, and other reference sources in computerized form, rather than in the print reference collection. There is a shift away from the reference desk and toward the public workstation as the gateway to information.

Many libraries have responded to this change by incorporating the idea of roving reference service. Roving is the act of a library employee circulating within the reference area or other parts of the library to offer assistance to users. A roving librarian approaches the user, rather than waiting for the user

Further establishing the marketability of contemporary research librarians, Business Reference Service and Sources goes to the front lines of business reference service, solidifying and updating the librarian user partnership. You'll see how research librarians can reach users at the crux of their needs. Overall, individual chapters address the needs of such people as students, business school officials, and corporations. Specifically, you'll read about these areas: Internet business research and ESL students, corporate home pages as supplements to traditional business resources, networking with community business sources, synergy in the information specialist customer partnership, avoiding information overload in bibliographic instruction, the Internet's impact on government documents, assessing the validity of electronic journals, underprivileged nontraditional students, and bibliographic instruction. Today, in our climate of negative ad campaigns directed at libraries and librarians in general, business reference librarians face many challenges, academic as well as professional. But if you're one of the vocal proactive supporters of productive librarian customer partnerships, this book will help you grow feet and move out from behind the restrictive comfort of your desk into the world's classrooms and manufacturing teams.
