Ancient Building in Cyprus George R. H. Wright, 1992. The wealth of excavation in Cyprus conducted across a period of nearly a century and a half has revealed much evidence of ancient building of all functional categories. This picture extends over a vast range of time: ca. 10,000 years since Cyprus is probably the place where the earliest substantial building known, the Neolithic round house, style is better presented than anywhere else in the world. It is the aim of this book to set forth and document the building tradition which hitherto has received no detailed exposition. The book will fill several gaps in the library shelves at one and the same time architectural history that presents all the archaeological evidence.

Photography and Cyprus Liz Wells, Theopisti Stylianou-Lambert, Nicos Philippou, 2020-12-18. Formerly a British colony, the island of Cyprus is now a divided country where histories of political and cultural conflicts, as well as competing identities, are still contested. Cyprus provides the ideal case study for this innovative exploration, extensively illustrated, of how the practice of photography in relation to its political, cultural, and economic contexts both contributes and responds to the formation of identity. Contributors from Cyprus, Greece, the UK, and the USA, representing diverse disciplines, draw from photography theory, art history, anthropology, and sociology to explore how the island and its people have been represented photographically. They reveal how the different gazes, colonial, political, gendered, and within art photography, contribute to the creation of individual and national identities and, by extension, to the creation and re-creation of imagery of Cyprus as place. While Photography and Cyprus focuses on one geographical and cultural territory, the questions this book asks and the themes and arguments it follows apply also to other places characterized by their colonial heritage. The intriguing example of Cyprus thus serves as a fitting test ground for current debates relating to photography, place, and identity.
