Seasonality In Human Mortality A Medico Geographical Study:

Seasonality in Human Mortality Roland Rau, 2006-11-24 Seasonal fluctuations in mortality are a persistent phenomenon across populations In Western countries of the Northern hemisphere mortality is typically larger in winter than in summer which is attributed to the detrimental effects of cold to health This does however not explain why in colder countries the differences between winter and summer mortality are smaller than in countries with warm or moderate climate This book therefore investigates whether sociodemographic and socioeconomic factors play a role as important for seasonal mortality as they do for mortality in general Using modern statistical methods the book shows for example for the United States that the fluctuations between winter and summer mortality are smaller the more years someone has spent in school

Health and Climate Change Pim Martens, 2014-04-08 Understanding how complex ecological and climatic change can influence human health is the new challenge before us The book confronts these multidimensional risk assessments head on and will catalyse the important interdisciplinary and integrated approach that is the new paradigm now required for environmental and public health research Dr JONATHAN PATZ Johns Hopkins School of Hygiene and Public Health This book provides a sturdy foundation for thinking about how best to tackle a varied spectrum of population health hazards posed by different aspects and combinations of global change processes it also goes that extra mile by estimating the attributable population burdens of disease or mortality that are likely to result from these aspects of global change It is heartening to see the results of this mathematical modeling being presented in policy relevant terms From the Foreword by TONY McMICHAEL Health and Climate Change is the first major study of the potentially devastating health impacts of the global atmospheric changes which are under way Using the best available data the author presents models of the most plausible future courses of vector borne diseases such as malaria dengue fever and schistosomiasis skin cancer caused by ozone depletion and cardiovascular and respiratory disorders caused by higher temperatures Current epidemiological research methods are not well adapted to analysing complex systems influenced by human intervention or more simple processes calculated to take place within the distant future Health and Climate Change proposes a new paradigm of integrated eco epidemiological models for these areas of study It will be essential reading for those concerned with public health and epidemiology environmental studies climate change and development studies Originally published in 1998

Holloway,1991 This doctoral dissertation focuses on identifying appropriate health surveillance strategies that measure refugee health trends over time and the relative effectiveness of health interventions in chronically displaced populations The author begins with a review of the way refugee epidemiology is carried out and the methodological factors which have affected its scope during the past decade Information is provided on studies dealing with epidemiological patterns reported in refugee populations evaluation in refugee populations and case studies It is argued that there have been few attempts to apply creatively and adapt epidemiological techniques in the post emergency and maintenance phases to evaluate the relative effectiveness of different refugee health strategies This study therefore applies time series analytic techniques to the specific case of mortality and morbidity data collected from 1983 1987 in one refugee camp in Thailand The objective of the study was to examine the effect of key environmental variables on the health of refugees residing in one closed refugee camp The author presents the methodology and the findings After giving the descriptive results with annual summary statistics for each of the years studied and graphic plots for all dependent and independent variables over time the dissertation presents results for times series and regression analysis of mortality and morbidity trends in infants and children A discussion concludes the thesis which contains an extensive bibliography and appendices
