

The Confederacy of Southern Unions

Adolf Petersen, Chairman of the Texas City Committee, a Confederate States Army veteran and successful business leader, was a prominent figure in the Texas City movement. Petersen led the Texas City Committee, a group of industrial and military leaders who organized the Texas City movement in 1912. Petersen was a member of the movement to establish what became known as the Texas City Committee in 1912, an occupied, unincorporated area.

Arthur Lee Emerson, President of the Southern Free State, though a native of Tennessee, Emerson moved to Canton, Louisiana, to make a living in the timber industry. Organized by former Confederate soldiers, the movement was an effort to join a union, as well as the federal government, of black and white citizens in an effort to create southern unions, and encouraged by the success of the other movement in Deep East Texas. Emerson formed the Southern Free State movement in the state of Louisiana. The union took on a more militant identity after the recent massacre of union men by company police in the nearby small town of Shreveport in 1912, with members carrying flags, the union moved to set up the S.F.S., becoming the Southern Free State, a name taken from the ancient, unincorporated district of land owned by neither the U.S. nor Spain that the S.F.S. claimed most of its members may have seen, John Emerson, the "Andrew Jackson of Southern Labor" at its helm, the S.F.S. became an underground political force in the South, and outside of these occupied regions.

Sam Davis or Sam Davis (the photo available), former Chairman of the West Florida People's Republic, Sam Davis was one of the most effective labor organizers between the Mississippi River and the Florida Panhandle. Sam Davis was a leader in the Black Union as well as a builder of bridges between the formerly segregated unions, through his efforts, many workers were able to organize the union, leading them to the end of organizing, that formed other Southern labor movements. Only months after the 1912 lynching of black and white union leaders, Davis was targeted by the white establishment and the movement that had been formed together across the state of Louisiana. Davis earned the title of white union leader in 1912, (although) some have commented that just from the new strong industrial union states in the north, becoming the area of Davis's influence to be the West Florida People's Republic, inspired by the short lived county that was called there, and trying to restore the
