under the stunning celestial sky or the elation shared by the whole family at the sight of blissful pods of dolphin and migrating tortoises John and Jean had hoped to use the trip as a teaching opportunity with the Emerald Jane as a floating classroom in which to instruct their children in important lessons not only about the natural world but about the beauty of human life when stripped down to its essence far from the trappings of civilization Yet rather than flourishing amid the new freedoms and responsibilities thrust upon them the children were sometimes confused frightened resentful The two oldest fourteen year old Ben and twelve year old Amelia missed their friends and the comfortable life left behind in San Diego while the two youngest Jack seven and Camille three picked up on the stressful currents running above and below the surface for throughout the journey the Silverwood family found its bonds tested as never before John and Jean whose marriage had weathered its share of storms would wonder again if they had taken on too much as the physical emotional and financial strains of caring for the expensive catamaran and their children brought old resentments to the surface John s dream trip that began on Long Island Sound ended almost two years later as a nightmare in treacherous waters off a remote atoll in French Polynesia where in an explosion of awesome violence the terrifying brunt of the ocean s anger fell upon the Emerald Jane Gradually in the crucible of the sea a stronger more closely knit unit was forged The Silverwoods became a crew Then they became a family again But just as it seemed to them that they had mastered every challenge their world was shattered in a split second of unimaginable horror Now their real challenge began forcing them to fight for their very lives
