What if vast undiscovered cities lie hidden beneath the seemingly impenetrable rainforests of our planet Jungles Hide Cities unveils the groundbreaking discoveries made possible by LiDAR Light Detection and Ranging technology and presents compelling evidence of extensive previously unknown ancient ruins buried beneath dense jungle canopies This interdisciplinary work bridges the gap between history earth sciences and geography revealing a new understanding of human civilization and its interaction with the environment The book argues that the application of advanced remote sensing techniques specifically LiDAR is revolutionizing our comprehension of past civilizations It challenges long held assumptions about the limitations of ancient societies and their ability to thrive in challenging environments We explore the significance of these findings emphasizing how they reshape our understanding of human history technological advancement and the impact of past societies on the environment We will provide the reader with a fundamental background in remote sensing technologies specifically focusing on how LiDAR works and its advantages over traditional archaeological methods in dense environments A basic understanding of archaeological survey techniques geographical information systems GIS and climate science will prove beneficial but is not essential as we explain these clearly The central argument posits that rainforests often perceived as barriers to civilization were in fact home to sophisticated densely populated societies that significantly altered their landscapes These societies contrary to popular belief possessed advanced knowledge of resource management engineering and urban planning This viewpoint compels us to reconsider the narrative of human progress appreciating the ingenuity and adaptability of past civilizations in diverse ecological settings The book is structured systematically It begins by introducing the core concepts of LiDAR technology and its application in archaeological research The initial chapters present case studies from various regions detailing the discovery and analysis of hidden urban centers We then shift to exploring the societal structures economic systems and environmental practices of these rediscovered civilizations The penultimate section explores the implications of these discoveries for our understanding of human history technological development and environmental adaptation Finally we conclude with a discussion of the ethical considerations involved in researching and preserving these sites along with potential applications for sustainable development and heritage management The evidence presented will largely consist of LiDAR derived maps archaeological data from limited excavations and comparative analyses of known historical sites We analyze the LiDAR data and compare it with surface level archaeological findings historical records and environmental data to provide a holistic view of these ancient societies Jungles Hide Cities draws connections between archaeology remote sensing climate science and historical anthropology The integration of these disciplines provides a more comprehensive understanding of the interplay between human activity and the environment The book offers a fresh perspective by utilizing cutting edge technology to challenge established historical narratives It moves beyond traditional ground based archaeology to reveal a hidden history of human ingenuity and adaptation We present a shift from conventional archaeological methods by focusing on a non invasive methodology to identify large scale environmental and structural changes The approach is factual and evidence based presented in a clear and accessible style suitable for a broad audience While maintaining academic rigor the book avoids jargon and employs narrative techniques to engage the reader and make complex information understandable The target audience includes anyone interested in archaeology history geography environmental studies and technological innovation The book will appeal to readers curious about the past and interested in the potential of technology to reshape our understanding of human history and our planet As a work of non fiction in the history earth sciences and geography genres Jungles Hide Cities adheres to the principles of accuracy objectivity and clear communication The book focuses primarily on the application of LiDAR technology to uncover hidden urban centers in rainforest environments The scope is limited to regions where LiDAR data has been extensively collected and analyzed While the book will reference other archaeological sites and historical periods for comparative purposes the primary focus remains on the discoveries made through LiDAR technology in rainforest regions The insights gained from this research can be applied to a variety of real world situations The knowledge of sustainable land management practices employed by ancient rainforest civilizations can inform modern conservation efforts Understanding how past societies adapted to environmental change can help us in addressing current climate challenges The book will touch on debates surrounding the role of human activity in shaping rainforest ecosystems The extent of human impact on the environment during ancient times will be explored potentially challenging prevailing narratives about pristine landscapes

Environmental Problems in an Urbanizing World Jorge E. Hardoy, Diana Mitlin, David Satterthwaite, 2013-11-05 New edition of Environmental Problems in Third World Cities Cities in Africa Asia and Latin America contain some of the world's most life and health threatening human environments Environment related diseases and injuries cause millions of preventable deaths each year In many squatter settlements children are 40 to 50 times more likely to die before the age of five than they would be in Europe or North America and most such deaths are environment related Many cities also cause serious environmental degradation to their surroundings and increasingly contribute to global warming This updated and much expanded edition of the classic Environmental Problems in Third World Cities describes environmental problems and their effect on human health local ecosystems and global cycles It points to the political causes that underpin many of these problems including ineffective unaccountable governments and aid agencies reluctance to work with the urban poor It also highlights innovative solutions such as High quality low cost homes

Creating Regenerative Cities Herbert Girardet, 2014-09-19 Large modern cities have effectively declared their independence from nature But while they take up only three percent of the world s land surface their ecological footprints actually cover the entire globe Humanity is building an urban future yet urban resource use is threatening the future of humanity and the natural world To meet the aspirations of city people in both developing and developed countries bold new initiatives are needed Modern cities are an astonishing human achievement As centres of innovation they are humanity s cultural playgrounds Their communication and transport systems have developed a global reach They are attractive to investors because they can offer a vast variety of services at comparatively low per capita costs But are they viable as ecological systems The planning of new cities as well as the retrofit of existing cities needs to undergo a profound paradigm shift Mere sustainable development is not enough To be compatible with natural systems cities need to move away from linear systems of resource use and learn to operate as closed loop circular systems To ensure their long term future they need to develop an environmentally enhancing restorative relationship between themselves and the natural systems on which they still depend Creating Regenerative Cities is a concise solution oriented manual for creating regenerative urbanisation A wide range of technical management and policy solutions already exist but implementation has been too slow and too little in large part because the kinds of holistic approaches needed are still unfamiliar to fragmented and process driven urban policy making and governance Herbert Girardet s 30 years experience as an ecologist thinker film maker and consultant working around the world has created this unique combination of tried and tested best practices and policies which outlines the fundamental shifts needed in the way we think about our cities
