Committee on the Judiciary, 1954 Power Cranes and Shovels, 1958 Rules and Regulations Governing the Administration of the Federal Water Power Act with Text of the Act and of Amendments of March 3, 1921, and June 23, 1930 United States. Federal Power Commission, 1931 Power Policy United States. Congress. House. Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, 1954 Niagara Power Development United States. Congress. House. Congress. Senate. Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. Subcommittee on Energy Production and Supply, 1978 The Balance of Power Great Britain. Parliament. House of Commons. Communities and Local Government Committee, 2009 The balance of power between central and local government matters because it affects the responsibility and accountability for delivery of services and improvements to local people and communities Democracy is strengthened where local people understand what local government is responsible for in terms of both policy and resources where they can hold to account local government for its performance and where crucially they believe that local government can make a real difference Local authorities should have the freedom to shape the development of their communities and the scope to unlock the full potential of local innovation Yet the predominant trend particularly since the second world war has been for central government to increase its powers and responsibilities at the expense of local government This report looks at the current role of local government assessing where it could be more proactive in making best use of existing structures and where change is required elsewhere by central government and its agencies and by Parliament to increase the scope for autonomous local government activity It considers the role of central government and the advantages to be gained at both the local and the national levels from adopting a minimalist as opposed to a maximalist role in relation to local government advocating further cultural change within central government to facilitate a decentralised balance of power structure The Committee also addresses the pressing need for reform of local government financial arrangements with a view to enabling local government to raise more of its own money Journal of Electricity, Power, and Gas, 1913
