

The Europeans who were in the land they called Papua New Guinea were with some difficulty to come land in possession, and find adventure. Then here was a frontier where men who elsewhere might have had ordinary lives could accomplish the extraordinary.

They faced an amazing range of physical and moral challenges in this, to them, new, hostile and beautiful country. Some walked where no white man had ever trodden, some taught, some preached, some exploited.

Inevitably, over time they faced problems of adaptation, some perhaps greater than the change from man-of-war relationship to that where Papua New Guineans rule their own nation, a situation that Hahl or Monckton, for example, would have greeted with total incredulity.

Some, like Chalmers, lost their lives there; some, like Mann, fought there; some, like the Leakey family, will live out their lives there.

Individually these pen portraits sketch men who were adventurous, physically tough, and mentally flexible, together they vividly portray the way of life of the white man in Prunepo's other island.
