Performance and Selection Guide

Lakeland's MicroMax® NS vs. DuPont's Tyvek®

Although MicroMax® NS is significantly less expensive than Tyvek®, cost should always be secondary to safety.

So how do you make a systematic and defensible choice between the world's two leading Protective Clothing brands? Comparative performance data for a range of exposure types is the only objective way.

Fortunately, comparative performance data are available for each fabric in the user instructions published by each company in accordance with the harmonized CE standards for protective garments, an international standard endorsed by DuPont.

These CE Standards are based upon a system of "Types" according to the type and degree of the hazard (as shown below). Standardized test methods for each Type then determine what Performance Class a given fabric meets: the better the performance the higher the Class numeric rating.

Harmonized CE Standards for Protective Garments

TYPE 6	TYPE 5	TYPE 4	TYPE 3	TYPE 1

Non-gas tight protection against liquid aerosol	Non-gas tight protection against airborne dry particulate chemicals	Non-gas tight protection against liquid chemical splash	Non-gas tight protection against high pressure liquid exposure or splash	Gas-tight protection against chemicals, vapors and toxic particles

The following are the comparative test results for Type 6 Liquid Aerosol and Type 5 Dry Particulate:

Strength /Durability Tests

MicroMax® NS outperforms Tyvek® in five of the nine tests in this category. Tyvek outperforms MicroMax® NS in three, and one is a tie.
