BROWNS Chances slip out of Browns' grasp in Atlanta

When the NFL schedule was released in April and a relatively easy first four weeks were unveiled for the Browns, there was a popular cry: Get to 3-1 without Deshaun Watson. But Jacoby Brissett and the Browns didn't get there, falling to 2-2 with a head-scratching, 23-20 loss to the Falcons on Sunday in Atlanta. The Browns doubled up the Falcons in yardage in the first half and held Falcons quarterback Marcus Mariota to just two completed passes in the final three quarters, but couldn't stop the Atlanta run game when it mattered. The Browns return home to face the L.A. Chargers next Sunday knowing they missed another great opportunity. John Kuntz, cleveland.com

ENVIRONMENT OHIO

Bringing back the giant Lake Erie sturgeon

ODNR says attempts to rebuild the population have been "above and beyond what we might have expected."

Peter Kroese pkroese@cleveland.com

The painstaking effort to replenish the decimated Lake sturgeon population in Lake Erie has shown early signs of success, but it will be decades before biologists know if they have accomplished their mission.

The once abundant giant of Lake Erie used to spawn in many of its tributaries, including the Maumee, Sandusky and Cuyahoga rivers.

Today, a small spawning aggregation of the prehistoric beasts — less than 1,000 in number — can be found in and around the headwaters of the Niagara River near Buffalo, while the vast majority of the species that still roam Lake Erie migrate from the Detroit River in the western end of the lake.

The St. Clair River, which flows out of Lake Huron and into Lake St. Clair, and the Detroit River, which flows out of Lake St. Clair into Lake Erie, have remained prime sturgeon habitat because they run deep, clear and fast, said Travis Hartman, Ohio Fisheries Program administrator with the Ohio Department of Natural Resources.

OHIO SUPREME COURT RACES

High stakes could influence abortion rights, redistricting

Three seats up for grabs in court that currently has four Republicans and three Democrats.

Laura Blaseck lbaseck@cleveland.com

COLUMBUS — On Nov. 8, Ohio voters will be asked to vote for three state Supreme Court justices, including selecting a chief justice. Ohio Supreme Court justices are among the most powerful figures in state government, deciding the constitutionality of laws and how the government may influence people's lives. Yet many voters skip the judicial part of their ballots because they're unfamiliar with the candidates.

This year, however, that is expected to change. The Republican-controlled legislature passed a law adding party affiliation after each Supreme Court justice candidate's name, beginning with the Nov. 8 General Election.

The balance of the court — which currently has four Republicans and three Democrats — hangs in the balance this election. Although judges are guided by the Ohio Code of Judicial Conduct, which urges them to be independent and impartial, numerous decisions in recent years have been split along party lines.

That is likely to favor Republicans, as the state is increasingly leaning right, said Kyle Kondik, an Ohio native and political analyst for the University of Virginia.

"If you think the Republicans statewide are ahead, and I think that's probably the case, you might expect at the end of the day for the Supreme Court to break that way too," he said. "They're probably going to be more inclined for the other races, in that they now have the party label."

Democrats, though, are hanging their hopes on an election motivated by the likelihood that the court would face any challenges to Ohio's abortion laws, as the General Assembly is expected to make abortion an election issue in December, after the November election. Abortion rights advocates are expected to pursue a reproductive rights amendment to the Ohio Constitution, which will likely face legal challenges. And redistricting cases also are expected to come before the court, Kondik said.
