A Review of the Recent Scientific Literature on Irrigation Induced and Enhanced Wetlands

by Jacob F. Berkowitz and Darrell E. Evans

PURPOSE: The following report provides a preliminary review of the recent scientific literature pertaining to the ecology and management of irrigation induced and enhanced wetlands. The report is designed to provide insight into the complexity of identifying irrigated wetlands for jurisdictional purposes, outline the current state-of-the-science regarding irrigated wetlands, and provide basic guidance on future actions required to address issues related to irrigated wetlands.

OUTLINE: The report contains: 1) a brief introduction, 2) background information summarizing the major issues associated with irrigated wetlands, 3) a description of the methods utilized in drafting the literature review, 4) summary of findings regarding the major categories of available scientific literature, and 5) appendices containing over 80 references, associated abstracts, and sources of additional information.

INTRODUCTION: The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers (USACE) is responsible for administering provisions Section 404 of the Clean Water Act, including the permitting and regulation of wetlands and other aquatic resources. Wetlands are identified based upon the observation of indicators of wetland hydrology, hydrophytic vegetation, and hydric soils (Environmental Laboratory 1987; USACE 2008). In areas exposed to extended periods of irrigation, wetland indicators may be supported solely or in part by presence of irrigation waters (USACE 2010). The presence of irrigation activities has resulted in complex and difficult wetland delineations, especially in the arid west region (Department of Ecology 2010). In order to address the challenges associated with identifying wetlands in irrigated areas, ERDC staff developed a multi-year proposal designed to provide technical support regarding irrigated wetlands issues. The following literature review represents the first phase of this effort.

BACKGROUND: Agricultural activities throughout the United States resulted in the loss of wetland areas, including a 90% reduction in historical wetlands of California's central valley (Lemly et al. 2000; Garone 2011) and a steady decrease in aquifer levels capable of supporting natural wetlands (Heermann 2003). However, irrigation activities associated with agriculture create and support irrigated wetlands due to the addition of irrigation waters and seasonal increases in stream levels as a result of upstream irrigation (Ekstein and Hygnstrom 1996; Sueltenfuss et al. 2013; Kendy and Bredehoeft 2006; Strange et al. 1999). Gollehan and Quimby (2000) reported that over 17 million ha of irrigated land occur in the western United States and many irrigation activities have persisted in the region for over 125 years (USACE 2010). Following extended periods of irrigation, all three factors used for wetland identification (i.e., hydrology, vegetation, and soils) can exhibit alteration (Environmental Laboratory 1987; USACE 2008; Summerford 2009).
