

BOTANICAL NOTES.

THE AMERICAN BREEDERS' ASSOCIATION.

A COUPLE of years ago, a number of botanists and zoologists joined interests with a number of practical growers of plants and animals and effected an organization of a new society under the name of 'The American Breeders' Association.' The purpose, as set forth in the constitution, adopted at St. Louis, December 29, 1903, is 'to study the laws of breeding and to promote the improvement of plants and animals by the development of expert methods of breeding.' With this object in view, about seven hundred members have been enrolled. These are, naturally, quite largely drawn from the ranks of practical breeders, but there are many scientific men also, and it is notable that the officers of the association have been very largely chosen from the professors in universities and colleges, and the scientific experts in the service of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Two meetings have been held, the first in St. Louis, December, 1903, and the second in Champaign, Illinois, February, 1905. In the first, seventeen papers were read, fully half of which possess more or less interest to the botanist. In the second meeting, twenty-eight papers were presented, with a still larger preponderance of papers relating to plant breeding. Among the papers of especial interest to botanists may be noted one by Professor DeVries on 'Investigations into the Heredity of Sporting Varieties,' another by Doctor Webber on 'Cotton Breeding,' one by W. A. Orton on 'Plant Breeding as a Factor in Controlling Plant Diseases,' one by Professor Hansen on 'Breeding Mildew-resistant Sand Cherries and Roses' and one by Dr. George T. Moore on 'Breeding Bacteria.' Other titles equally suggestive to the botanist might be cited, but these will show what the approaching meeting in Lincoln, January 17, 18 and 19, is likely to include. The program for this meeting is now being made out. It is understood that, in addition to general sessions of the association, there will be joint sessions with the State Horticultural Society, Corn Growers' Association, Live Stock and Dairymen's associations. The secretary is Professor W. M. Hays (assistant secretary of agriculture), Washington, D. C.

METHODS IN PLANT HISTOLOGY.

A LITTLE more than four years ago, the first edition of Dr. Chamberlain's 'Methods in Plant Histology' was noticed in these columns (SCIENCE, August 16, 1901). Now a second edition has appeared, much improved and considerably enlarged. In it so much new matter has been incorporated that the book is in fact a new one and must wholly replace the first edition. The extent of the enlargement may be estimated from the fact that, while the first edition contained 159 pages and 74 figures, the second contains 262 pages and 88 figures. Many new methods of work are described in this edition which were but briefly referred to, or were wholly omitted from the first. In the systematic part of the book many more suggestions as to collecting and growing material are given, thus greatly increasing its practical value. This edition must prove to be even more useful to botanical workers in high school, college and university laboratories than its predecessor.

FERNS OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

DR. E. B. COPELAND has recently made an important addition to our knowledge of the flora of the Philippines by the publication of a descriptive list of the orders of ferns (Polypodiaceae) occurring in the islands. It appears as Bulletin 28 of the government laboratories at Manila, bearing date of July, 1905, and covers 139 octavo pages. The general nature of the fern flora as far as represented in this booklet may be understood from the following analysis. There are eight families represented, as follows: Woodsieae (with 1 genus, and 1 species); Aspidieae (9 genera, 117 species); Davalliaceae (12 genera, 72 species); Asplenieae (12 genera, 91 species); Pterideae (11 genera, 44 species); Vittarieae (3 genera, 14 species); Polypodieae (10 genera, 99 species); Achrostichieae (4 genera, 7 species). The largest genera are Nephrodium (with 60 species), Lindsaya (with 22 species), Asplenium (with 36 species), and
