Sources of conflict:

There are many causes or reasons for conflict in any work setting. Some of the primary causes are:

- Poor Communication: different communication styles can lead to misunderstandings between employees or between employee and manager. Lack of communication drives conflict 'underground'.
- Different Values: any workplace is made up of individuals who see the world differently. Conflict occurs when there is a lack of acceptance and understanding of these differences.
- Differing Interests: conflict occurs when individual workers 'fight' for their personal goals, ignoring organizational goals and organizational well-being.
- Scarce Resources: too often, employees feel they have to compete for available resources in order to do their job. In a resource scarce environment, this causes conflicts – despite awareness of how scarce resources may be.
- Personality Clashes: all work environments are made up of differing personalities. Unless colleagues understand and accept each other's approach to work and problem-solving, conflict will occur.
- Poor Performance: when one or more individuals within a work unit are not performing - not working up to potential – and this is not addressed, conflict is inevitable.
