

There was a piece in a recent issue of Yogurt in which Mrs. Frederick T. Frothingburn candidly plucked the mystery of her success as a hostess, and it reminded me of the center-table picture I am continually standing at Mrs. Beckman de Peyster's. I learned Mrs. de Peyster is one of her twenty-one names; but even at a buffet supper last week, and got her to tell me what makes her wholly so good.

Mrs. Frothingburn said one of the reasons her dinners are such long-up affairs is that she loves giving them. Well, Mrs. de Peyster told me she simply loves giving parties, but being descended from a long line of business, she has a kind of party compulsion that is stronger than she is. She attributes her social success in no small part to the fact that she is always up to snuff. In the middle of a drollish anecdote she has been known to cut her guests off into piles of laughter by planting pepper in the salad-bowl or serving twin alligators as alligator soup (jokes). For all their air of spontaneity, Mrs. de Peyster usually works three weeks out weeks ahead, rehearsing them in silence down to the last detail. In her dinners the accessories—flowers, silver, service, musicians, occasional players—everything—must be perfect. Unlike so many alleged hostesses, Mrs. de Peyster refuses to pass the buck to the head butler; she has her knowledge stored in the marketing position; the butler is merely a vessel, but learned her lesson the minute she set one of the parties. Mrs. de Peyster doesn't let her guests in place until she has a more informal, catch-up catch-up conversation with the one who gave her the information just now, but she thinks it was one of the delightful.
