Thomas T. Barker, 1991 Two unmistakable trends in software documentation emerge from the academic literature of the last few years The first trend is toward usability as the standard for all software documentation The second trend is toward online presentation as the primary preferred medium for software documentation As we shall see this medium allows a number of new interface elements to fall under the broad umbrella of software documentation In fact the evidence of these trends tends to suggest that we need to broaden our definition of software documentation It is toward this broadening that this book inclines This book is designed to address the randomness of the literature on software documentation Perspectives on Software Documentation contains a variety of perspectives all tied together by the shared need to make software products more usable Nonacademic Writing Ann Hill Duin, Craig J. Signs, Genres, and Communities in Technical Communication M. Jimmie Killingsworth, Michael Gilbertson, 2018-12-20 This important new text invites readers to step back from their busy professional lives and look at technical communication philosophically to ask fundamental questions such as what does it mean to communicate and how do language and graphics the signs or tools of the technical communicator relate to action in a technological world Through this excursion in the theory of technical discourse you will discover a fresh approach to reports manuals and proposals produced and consumed daily in business government and research organizations around the world The authors examine familiar genres in two relatively new ways

Connecting People with Technology George Hayhoe, Helen M. M Grady, 2020-11-26 This book explores five important areas where technology affects society and suggests ways in which human communication can facilitate the use of that technology Usability has become a foundational discipline in technical and professional communication that grows out of our rhetorical roots which emphasize purpose and audience As our appreciation of audience has grown beyond engineers and scientists to lay users of technology our appreciation of the diversity of those audiences in terms of age geography and other factors has similarly expanded We are also coming to grips with what Thomas Friedman calls the flat world a paradigm that influences how we communicate with members of other cultures and speakers of other languages And because most of the flatteners are either technologies themselves or technology driven technical and professional communicators need to leverage these technologies to serve global audiences Similarly we are inundated with information about world crises involving health and safety issues These crises are driven by the effects of terrorism the aging population HIV AIDS and both human made and natural disasters These issues are becoming more visible because they are literally matters of life and death Furthermore they are of special concern to audiences that technical and professional communicators have little experience targeting the shapers of public policy seniors adolescents and those affected by disaster Biotechnology is another area that has provided new roles for technical and professional communicators We are only beginning to understand how to communicate the science accurately without either deceiving or panicking our audience We need to develop a more sophisticated understanding of how communication can shape reactions to biotechnology developments Confronting this complex network of issues we're challenged to fashion both our message and the audience's perceptions ethically Finally today's corporate environment is being shaped by technology and the global nature of business Technical and professional communicators can play a role in capturing and managing knowledge in using technology effectively in the virtual workplace and in understanding how language shapes organizational culture
