Patten's Human Embryology Bradley Merrill Patten, Clark Edward Corliss, 1976 Development of the Central Nervous System in Vertebrates S.C. Sharma, A.M. Goffinet, 2012-12-06 The major theme of this book is the development of the vertebrate central nervous system. This volume contains summaries of most of the invited participants at the NA advanced study institute entitled Development of central nervous system in vertebrates held in Maratea Italy from June 23 to July 5, 1991. In order to address this topic we have drawn upon a selection of current studies dealing with molecular, cellular, and system analysis which specifically pertain to the general principles of the development. The major aim of this institute was to bring together a select group of investigators who would present their views on the current issues in their respective fields and to foster extensive discussions amongst participants in smaller groups. Such interactions brought together the exchanges of ideas amongst participants and helped clarify the intricate details and formulate new vistas and collaborations. Since the study of nervous system development has focused mostly on the origin of neuron and glia cells, the area of current research was represented by talks on early cellular events including effects of growth factors, BOX, and other gene expressions and cell lineage of specific cell types. Formation of specific cell types and the specific neuronal connections have been a major theme in the study of the nervous system development. Recent technical advances have resulted in new information at both cellular and molecular levels which have provided new details. Current research was represented by selective topics discussed at the meeting.

The Custom-Made Brain Jean-Didier Vincent, Pierre-Marie Lledo, 2014-06-03 Two leading neuroscientists examine how the brain is in flux and how this applies to addressing neurological, cognitive, and emotional health. Beginning with a survey of the fundamental scientific developments that led to our current understanding of the regenerative mind, the authors elucidate the breakthrough neurobiological studies that paved the way for our present understanding of the brain's plasticity and regenerative capabilities. They then discuss the application of these findings to such issues as depression, dyslexia, schizophrenia, and cognitive therapy, incorporating the latest technologies in neuroimaging, optogenetics, and nanotechnology. Their work shows the brain is anything but a static organ, ceasing to grow as human beings become adults. Rather, the brain is dynamic, evolving organically in relation to physical, cultural, historical, and affective stimuli, a plasticity that provides early hope to survivors of trauma and degenerative disorders. Highly informative, up to date, and entertaining, The Custom Made Brain emphasizes that the brain is constantly being constructed during an individual's lifetime, like a medieval cathedral that is never finished and yet ages without reaching maturity. The brain, like the cathedral, is forever being repaired and restored. A stimulating read. Israel Rosenfield, City University of New York, author of The Invention of Memory: A New View of the Brain. This short account succeeds in an original and thought-provoking manner. It will become a valuable resource for clinicians who manage the care of those disabled by stroke, brain injury, or dementia. Many young scientists will be encouraged to take up the challenge of brain repair in the face of decades of therapeutic pessimism. Lawrence Whalley
