

Rubén Darío KEY

Rubén Darío Simentel was born in 1867 in Nicaragua. He spent his childhood in the city of León and was raised by his mother's uncles. He was a curious child who was reading at the age of three and shortly thereafter was writing his first poems. He published his first poem at the age of 13 and soon earned the nickname el príncipe or child poet in English. Darío attended a Jesuit school and many of his early writings showed an aversion to the Catholic Church. In 1881 he moved to the capital city of Managua and began working as a journalist. A few years later he moved to El Salvador and there he met the president and numerous famous poets and Salvadorans.

In 1883, Darío became ill with smallpox and he returned to Nicaragua to recover. While back in his home country he experimented with new forms of expression. He also wrote a book and a play. Unhappy in Managua, Darío went to Chile in 1886 and got a job with the newspaper La Esfera. While in Chile, he continued writing poetry and he entered his works in various competitions. Gradually he was recognized for his talent, in particular his most famous book, entitled Azul, or Blue in English.

In 1890, Darío married and his first son was born the following year. In 1893, his first wife died and he married again and had another son. Darío traveled extensively on behalf of the Nicaraguan government spending time in Costa Rica, Spain, France, Argentina, Cuba, Mexico and the United States. During his travels, he met many famous artists and politicians and was particularly influenced by the French poetry of his time, in particular, Victor Hugo and the other romantics. Darío died at the age of 49 while in France in 1916.
