Huppe, 1959-06-30 Augustinian literary doctrine religious in its orientation held that the purpose of literature is the promotion of charity to the end that God may be enjoyed that the true basis for eloquence is the truth in the meaning of words not in the words themselves This tightly defined frame allowed none of the individualistic fancies we now associate with poetry Dr Huppe has illustrated the continuing influence of this theory by references to Isidore of Seville the obscure rhetorician Vergil of Toulouse Bede and his continental successors Alcuin and Rabanus and to John Scotus Erigena The conscious and unconscious influence of this doctrine and of Christian thought in general was felt not only in the interpretation of poetry but in its creation as well Dr Huppe's most dramatic example is the work of Caedmon an unschooled but devout layman Caedmon's famous Hymn the first Christian poem in English and its reception by learned ecclesiastics vividly demonstrate the convergence of doctrine and poetry Old English as well as Latin Along with Caedmon's Hymn and the Caedmonian Genesis Dr Huppe analyzes other Old English classics In relating them to Latin poetic theory he indicates a whole new direction for their study His basic hypothesis may well be extended to relate Old English to Late Medieval verse thus establishing the latter's rightful place in the mainstream of Christian poetry The author has added his own translations of the Latin and Old English poetry treated in the text which facilitates the reading of this most rewarding book

Eighteenth-Century Women Poets and Their Poetry Paula R. Backscheider, 2005-12-31 Co Winner James Russell Lowell Prize Modern Language Association This major study offers a broad view of the writing and careers of eighteenth century women poets casting new light on the ways in which poetry was read and enjoyed on changing poetic tastes in British culture and on the development of many major poetic genres and traditions Rather than presenting a chronological survey Paula R Backscheider explores the forms in which women wrote and the uses to which they put those forms Considering more than forty women in relation to canonical male writers of the same era she concludes that women wrote in all of the genres that men did but often adapted revised and even created new poetic kinds from traditional forms Backscheider demonstrates that knowledge of these women's poetry is necessary for an accurate and nuanced literary history Within chapters on important canonical and popular verse forms she gives particular attention to such topics as women's use of religious poetry to express candid ideas about patriarchy and rape the continuing evolution and important role of the supposedly antiquarian genre of the friendship poetry same sex desire in elegy by women as well as by men and the status of Charlotte Smith as a key figure of the long eighteenth century not only as a Romantic era poet

Logic, Ontology, and the Art of Poetry, 1776

Poetry's Data Meredith Martin, 2025-04-22 In this book Meredith Martin presents a historical account of prosodic criticism and through the example of her own research path argues for new scholarly practices in literary studies and the humanities more broadly Challenging the common scholarly practice of emphasizing one critical narrative one pathway through history or one author's reading the book traces three arcs the effects of the major shift in the late twentieth century from print based to digital resources in scholarship with the emergence of the World Wide Web Martin's experience as a scholar who coordinated a digital project about the history of the study of poetry which led to the creation of the Princeton Prosody Archive and the founding of Princeton's Center for Digital Humanities CDH and the mix of computational and aesthetic elements in the study of prosody including the study of versification and meter in the broader context of English literary study as a discipline Across these three arcs Martin argues that scholars must take seriously the idea of digital media as mediation through which textual forms are transformed into data and delivered to us via data structures and that our reading of historical texts in digital forms must reckon with these mediations She also demonstrates the connection between the intellectual labor of studying prosody or any historical object and the intellectual labor of fostering a collaborative research process This is a book she writes about the shifting grounds of knowledge production in the digital age and how we might situate ourselves amid these shifts by returning to of all things poetry
