In 1773 the North Carolina Committee of Safety resolved to "employ immediately all the Gunsmiths in the Colony in the making of Muskets and Bayonets, of the size and manner recommended by Congress..." Surviving specimens are very rare and no North Carolina pieces are presently known. This musket was made in Philadelphia. The barrel is marked "FRIEND COUNTY" and at the lock is the C.F. interlocking pistol mark called for in Committee of Safety orders. The lock is marked "NICHOLSON" for John Nicholson. The bore is 48 caliber and the barrel length 44 inches.

Committee of Safety Gunsmiths

With the approach of the bicentennial of the American Revolution, increased interest in arms of the period has created an intense need for detailed information on period armaments. Quite naturally, armaments in America during the Revolutionary period have drawn the most excitement and are in the most demand, yet at the same time they have become undervalued as times in the past they have become undervalued at times in the past they have become undervalued. The typical form of inadequate documentation. The American arms of the Revolutionary years does not always conform to well-defined patterns such as those followed in England and France during the period, and although provincial Committees of Safety drew up specifications for arms to be made under contract, these specifications were not always rigidly adhered to. Raw material scarcity, lack of experience, and other problems were responsible for this.

During the forty years preceding the Revolution, the military arm most familiar to the colonist was the so-called "Brown Bess" musket, the standard small-arms of the British Empire from the late 1720's until after the War of 1812. In England, and probably in the Colonies as well, this musket was referred to as the "long land pattern" musket, if it had the forty-six inch barrel, or the "short land pattern" musket, if it had the forty-two inch barrel. Today these pieces are commonly referred to as First and Second Model Brown Besses. The Second Model, forty-two inch barrel musket, began to be issued in quantity in the early 1760's, with certain superficial modifications to hardware. Eventually, the Second Model superseded the First Model, but both were in use in America's Revolution. These two muskets comprise a large family of related carbines, ketoes, blunderbusses, and form the Regular Establishment of the eighteenth century.

When it became necessary to begin production of their preparation for war, they may the Brown Bess for a pattern, a musket had been in use in the militia and Regulars for many French, Dutch, and Germans. It was found in the Colonies, but that time considered these muskets rather than rebels, as they adopted the Brown Bess and proven British muskets were more Besses to use as a

The Brown Bess was a being between ten and eleven inches in height, who was a seven inches in height. But the Bess was the finest in century, from the standpoints of workmanship and finish, and its polished wood added implicative image of the English. A seventeen-inch bayonet is the terror of Europe in century, and with it a substantial military reputation.

The Brown Bess was of about 50 caliber, with forty-six inch barrel as a smaller brother to the L
