Water and War at Pyreneus Mountains: Historical Eco-Archaeology of Lavras do Abade Diogo M. Costa, 2011-02 The Lavras do Abade research is a multiple perspective archaeological study about the environmental impacts of a gold mining village in Mid Western Brazil that was destroyed by neighboring villages at the end of the nineteenth century According to local narratives the conflict was the consequence of a dispute about the control and use of natural resources such as water However this investigation reveals that the conflict was caused also by economic and political disputes between the villages in the region In this work each stage of investigation is presented in separate chapters Research was conducted to validate hypotheses and to combine different approaches to each element that compounds this mosaic of information The result of this work is a combination of various complementary investigations into the same object and is a theoretical and methodological referential that establishes the Lavras do Abade case study as an original bridge to understanding many Water Wars in the modern world today

Britannia Prima Roger White, 2007 When Edward I took Caernarfon seat of the Princes of Gwynedd in 1278 he conquered the last remaining part of the Roman Empire Why was it that this part of the Roman Empire survived for 800 years before succumbing to the medieval kingdoms that succeeded Rome In answering this question this book offers a new and innovative perspective on Wales the South West and the Welsh Marches at a time when they were united as Britannia Prima one of the four late Roman provinces of Britain Created at the end of the third century the province endured for 200 years offering a successful resistance to the incoming Anglo Saxon invaders throughout the fifth century This book the first ever to examine one of the provinces of late Roman Britain provides a critical analysis of the abundant archaeological information now available In doing so it paints a picture of a wealthy and flourishing Roman society in the fourth century able to achieve a measure of economic self sufficiency through its wealth of natural resources a society that maintained its Roman and urban character throughout the fifth century Eventually Britannia Prima fragmented overwhelmed by the internal and external pressures that it faced but its enduring legacy is the distinct nature culture and
