thread to the surface at the edge of the right-hand side strip at the top. Take it to the back on the other strip opposite, and proceed to work about five Buttonhole stitches along the thread now joining the edges of fabric together. This done, pick up with the needle the edge of the fabric at point A, and then carry the needle and thread across to the left side and pick up the edge of the fabric at point B. This point is not opposite A, it is slightly lower down. Now proceed to work three Buttonhole stitches on the doubled thread which first passed from the uppermost buttonholed bar to the right side, point A, and then was carried across to point B. The needle in the diagram is just commencing to work three such stitches lower down. This buttonholing is always worked from the centre towards an edge. These completed, the needle next picks up the edge of the fabric on the right side, a little below point A, and then works three Buttonhole stitches upon the double bar, which passes between point B and the completed buttonhole stitching above. These three stitches are worked from right to left instead of in the usual direction. Next, the edge of the fabric on the left side is picked up a
