The Complete Guide to Preventing Cancer Elizabeth M. Whelan, 1994-06 This important book is a guide to understanding cancer and its causes Dr Elizabeth Whelan a nationally known consumer advocate explains in layperson's terms what the average consumer can do to reduce the risks of contracting this most feared of diseases For decades Americans have assumed that cancer strikes in wholly unpredictable ways and that it is simply a matter of fate that one person is afflicted with the disease while another is not Yet Whelan points to research showing that when it comes to cancer risks we largely determine our own fates Science has made great strides in recent years toward understanding the causes of this complex illness As a result Whelan believes that we now have the knowledge to significantly reduce the incidence of cancer nationwide But how does the average person interpret the confusing array of warnings and suspicions regarding cancer risks which are reported almost daily in the news media Whelan goes to great lengths to separate the unproven hypothetical causes of cancer from reliable scientific findings Above all tobacco in all its forms and uses is the main culprit estimates now attribute some 40 percent of cancer incidence to exposure to tobacco. Whelan also discusses other contributing factors such as diet, alcohol, radioactivity, sunlight, drugs, sexual behavior, environmental factors, and occupational risks. This book is well written and easy to read; the bibliography is extensive. Chicago Medicine: A very useful health guide. Choice! I can recommend it as authoritative and well written with the average reader in mind. This book is a must for all public libraries and libraries at the high school and college level. It should be recommended supplemental reading for high school and college students taking courses in the health sciences and will be of reference help to teachers preparing lectures on this subject. Cancer Prevention: The Causes and Prevention of Cancer – Volume 1 Graham A. Colditz, D.J. Hunter, 2000-11-30 This volume the first in the new series Cancer Prevention Cancer Causes is derived from the 1st and 2nd Reports of the Harvard Center for Cancer Prevention published in Cancer Causes and Control 1996 7 Suppl 1 and 1997 8 Suppl 2 respectively. In this volume we expand on materials to summarize the evidence on causes of cancer and to set forth a series of strategies to promote the prevention of cancer. Cancer Prevention Cancer Causes is designed to provide a comprehensive overview of what we know about cancer risk in the United States and other established market economies and the preventive measures we can take to reduce the burden of cancer. In the first half of this volume we review the causes of human cancer considering a wide range of potential sources of risk such as smoking, diet, sedentary lifestyle, occupational factors, viruses, and alcohol. We conclude that cancer is indeed preventable. Over 50 percent of cancers could be prevented if we could implement what we already know about the causes of cancer. In the second half of this volume we summarize research on prevention programs, public education, campaigns, and social policy measures for preventing cancer. Working in schools, health clinics, and workplaces, as well as through the mass media and in the political arena, social scientists and health educators are designing innovative and effective health promotion programs to help people quit smoking, eat more healthily, and exercise more.

Understanding Cancer Prevention through Geospatial Science Trevor Dummer, 2024-09-27 The worldwide cancer burden will double over the next two decades with the number of new cancer diagnoses increasing in all regions of the world. However, it is estimated that around 40% of all cancers are preventable through the appropriate application of existing epidemiological and public health knowledge, and with further research, this proportion will increase considerably. This edited volume explores the role of place in cancer prevention and how geospatial tools can be used to support this globally important goal. Its chapters detail many aspects of the application of geospatial science to cancer control, including quantifying exposure to environmental carcinogens, access to screening services, the importance of partnership building, and more, through a variety of geographically diverse case studies. The book also offers background on geospatial modeling tools and methods for adding spatial analysis to cancer surveillance systems. The book is rooted firmly in the notion that geography significantly influences the accumulation of cancer risks at the individual and community level that are modifiable through policy, regulatory, and behavioral changes. The landscape of cancer prevention is vast, encompassing the building blocks of population and public health: i.e., epidemiology and causation through risk factor modifications, behavior, and policy change to the interface of the cellular with society, including epigenetic modifications and gene-environment interactions, cancer genomics, and precision medicine. It is clear that geography, space, place, setting, context is central to all these activities. Geospatial methods and data support risk factor identification can elucidate the interaction between individual behavioral demographic and genetic factors with community level contextual factors and can be used to prioritize interventions more accurately towards at risk people and at risk population groups Geography is also central to the organization of health services and hence by definition is fundamental to the organization of preventative services More broadly adopting a geographical approach can help move cancer prevention beyond a narrow medical definition of health to tackle the upstream and structural determinants of cancer
