

MAKING MEANING

A routine for constructing collective meaning of words, ideas, concepts, or events

A word, concept, or event is identified as the focus for this routine. Groups then work through each of the following prompts, recording their responses on chart paper to make collective meaning:

- Taking turns, each person responds to the chosen focus with a single word. Each person's word must be unique so that it adds to the collective meaning.
- Each person adds on to someone else's word with an additional word or phrase so as to elaborate in some way.
- Each person makes a connection between ideas that are already written on the chart paper, drawing lines and writing on those lines to illuminate the connections.
- Each person records a question that arising about the topic of focus based on what is emerging.
- Based on the group's "Making-Meaning discussion" on chart paper, each individual now writes their own definition of the word, topic, concept, or event being explored.

This book explores how women make meaning at various health flashpoints in their lives, overcoming fear, anxiety, and anger to draw upon self-advocacy research and crucial decision making. Combining focus group research, content analysis, autoethnography, and textual inquiry, the book argues that the making and remaking of what we call patient epistemologies is a continual process wherein a health flashpoint, sometimes a new diagnosis, sometimes a reoccurrence or worsening of an existing condition, or the progression of a natural process can cause an individual to be thrust into a discourse community that was not of their own choosing. This study will interest students and scholars of health communication, rhetoric of health and medicine, women's studies, public health, healthcare policy, philosophy of medicine, medical sociology, and medical humanities. Reclaiming Literacies as Meaning Making Kathryn Whitmore, Richard Meyer, 2020-04-15. Whitmore and Meyer bring together top literacy scholars from around the world to introduce the concept of manifestations of meaning making in literacy events, practices, processes, products, and thinking. Manifestations are windows into literacy identities and serve as affective and sociocultural signifiers of learners' understanding at a point in time and in a specific context. The volume reclaims progressive spaces for understanding reading, writing, drawing, speaking, playing, and other literacies. It grounds manifestations of literacies in the discourse of meaning making and demonstrates how literacy learners and educators are active agents in this complex social, political, emotional, and multimodal process. Ideal for preservice teachers, graduate students, and researchers in literacy education, this book shifts the conversation away from treating literacies as acquired commodities and illustrates how educators engage with learners to deepen understanding of literacy learners' experiences. Organized by five pillars of literacy teaching/learning: language, curriculum, and sociocultural contexts, each section covers critical and cutting-edge topics and offers examples, tools, and strategies for research and practical applications in diverse classroom settings. Each chapter includes a range of examples and is followed by a short complementary reading extension to engage the reader. Making Meaning Developmental Studies Center (Oakland, Calif.), Developmental Studies Center Staff, 2006-07-30.
