shrines had a huge advantage over the colonial art institutions such as the Mayo School of Arts in Lahore. The mystically inspired shrines built as a statement of Muslim ruling ambitions were better suited to the task of appealing to local art traditions. By contrast, the colonial institutions rooted in the Positivist Romanticism of the Victorian West found assimilation to be more of a challenge. In questioning their relative success and failures at influencing local culture, the book explores the extent to which political control translates into cultural influence. Folktales, Sufi shrines, colonial architecture, institutional education methods, and museum exhibitions all provide a wealth of sources for revealing the complex dynamic between the Punjabi artisans, the Sufi community, and the colonial British. In this unique look at a little explored aspect of India's history, Hussain Ahmad Khan explores this evidence in order to illuminate this web of cultural influences. Examining the Sufi artisan relationship within the various contexts of political revolt, the decline of the Mughals, and the struggle of the Sufis to establish an Islamic state, this book argues that Sufi shrines were initially constructed with the aim of affirming a distinct Muslim identity. At the same time, art institutions established by colonial officials attempted to promote eclectic architecture representing the British Indian empire as well as to revive the pre-colonial traditions with which they had previously seemed out of touch. This important book sheds new light on the dynamics of power and culture in the British Empire.

The Emperor's House Michael Featherstone, Jean-Michel Spieser, Gülru Tanman, Ulrike Wulf-Rheidt, 2015-08-31. Evolving from a patrician domus, the emperor's residence on the Palatine became the centre of the state administration. Elaborate ceremonial regulated access to the imperial family creating a system of privilege which strengthened the centralised power. Constantine followed the same model in his new capital under a Christian veneer. The divine attributes of the imperial office were refashioned with the emperor as God's representative. The palace was an imitation of heaven. Following the loss of the empire in the West and the Near East, the Palace in Constantinople was preserved, subject to the transition from Late Antique to Mediaeval conditions until the Fourth Crusade, attracting the attention of Visigothic, Lombard, Merovingian, Carolingian, Norman, and Muslim rulers. Renaissance princes later drew inspiration for their residences directly from ancient ruins and Roman literature, but there was also contact with the Late Byzantine court. Finally, in the age of Absolutism, the palace became again an instrument of power in vast centralised states with renewed interest in Roman and Byzantine ceremonial. Spanning the broadest chronological and geographical limits of the Roman imperial tradition from the Principate to the Ottoman empire, the papers in the volume treat various aspects of palace architecture, art, and ceremonial.
