Prospects for Fusion Power Stephen Odell Dean, 1981 An Assessment of the Prospects for Inertial Fusion Energy National Research Council, Division on Engineering and Physical Sciences, Board on Energy and Environmental Systems, Board on Physics and Astronomy, Committee on the Prospects for Inertial Confinement Fusion Energy Systems, 2013-07-05 The potential for using fusion energy to produce commercial electric power was first explored in the 1950s Harnessing fusion energy offers the prospect of a nearly carbon free energy source with a virtually unlimited supply of fuel Unlike nuclear fission plants appropriately designed fusion power plants would not produce the large amounts of high level nuclear waste that requires long term disposal Due to these prospects many nations have initiated research and development R compares the various technical approaches to IFE and identifies the scientific and engineering challenges associated with developing inertial confinement fusion ICF in particular as an energy source It also provides guidance on an R D roadmap at the conceptual level for a national program focusing on the design and construction of an inertial fusion energy demonstration plant Fusion Power Development and Commercial Prospects Atomic Industrial Forum. Committee on Fusion, 1976 Panel Discussion on Prospects for Fusion Power, 1986 Although substantial progress is made every year in fusion research the projected time to realize the ultimate goal of commercial fusion always seems to be 25 to 30 years away This shifting schedule reflects the underlying difficulty of developing fusion Every new technology improves the prospects for success yet as each fusion mountain is scaled it serves mainly to bring a better view of the next mountain Two questions are considered 1 why are so many configurations studied and 2 what constitutes an economic power density
