Constructions of Literacy Louise E. Thomson, Jay W. Simmons, 2010

Today s adolescents are expected to read and write well at highly competent levels and the content area literacy skills they will acquire in adolescence are necessary for academic achievement as well as life long learning In the middle grades content area literacy skills are perfected through work in various curricular areas which are housed in the context of specific school cultures Content literacy instructional practices shape the learning strategies needed in order to read and think critically about abstract ideas as a result of their reading skills Understanding the ways content area teachers support the development of adolescents literacy skills in the context of specific school cultures will do much to help us to improve young adolescents literacy learning environments and thus their literacy achievement In this qualitative comparative case study I sought to answer the question In a selected middle school how are young adolescents instructed in content area literacy in three disciplinary areas and how does the context of that middle school shape the delivery of this instruction This research study was conducted in a suburban public middle school in Southeastern Massachusetts with three content area teachers in three specific disciplines social studies science and mathematics During the course of a four month case study approximately sixteen weeks I collected data in the form of demographic surveys three classroom observations per content area teacher two on site interviews and visual data in order to document the literacy instructional practices found among these teachers within the same middle school Through the use of these standard qualitative research tools I documented the instructional practices and perspectives of these middle school teachers with the aim of better understanding the essential qualities of literacy instruction teachers implement in their content area courses and how that affects young adolescents literacy opportunities in these classrooms Throughout the course of the study I organized and analyzed data utilizing the QSR NVivo 8 qualitative data analysis software program The NVivo 8 software facilitated the structure and coding of data as well as my ability to determine relationships There were several critical findings that emerged from this study First I found that the classroom teachers and administrators in the school shared congruent values about adolescent literacy instruction and these shared values provided the basis for a cultural context for instruction Second I found that in this school teachers were implementing a blend of the traditional and current research based content area literacy instruction that has been identified by researchers as being successful in promoting the development of adolescent literacy Last I found that the school s infrastructure was supportive of content area literacy and provided professional development and opportunities for faculty to collaborate around literacy instruction which reinforced the implementation of content literacy across the curriculum Understanding the ways content area teachers support the development of adolescents literacy skills in a specific school culture as presented in this study provides information on the extent to which the school context helps the advancement of literacy skills The work and dedication required for establishing an integrated literacy approach across content areas is substantial requiring conceptual changes and a new awareness among all administrators and staff of how a general school culture can advance or undermine the growth of literacy skills Thus integrating content area literacy instruction in the middle schools is a complex process that will require teacher education collaboration and a commitment to change Overall extended literacy instruction in the content area is necessary so that adolescents can handle the demands of our knowledge based society as well as acquire positive experiences in school at work and in the global economy

Advanced Reading Instruction in Middle School Janice I. Robbins, 2021-09-03 Addressing the needs of academically advanced young adolescents in reading is a tall order Advanced Reading Instruction in Middle School offers teachers a structured process for guiding students in preparing for collaborative discussions about books Structured discussions enable students to examine the author s work together as they respond to essential questions using evidence from the reading Students are directed to make personal connections to story characters plots and settings They are asked to explore the writer s craft through the examination of selected words structures settings and literary devices incorporated in the novels This guide includes specific literary analysis activities suitable for the six types of fiction presented and offers annotated lists of recommended advanced level books of each type including those recommended in the CCSS The guide also supports the social and emotional issues of early adolescents offering specific works suitable for a range of common topics such as identity friendships high expectations and feelings of isolation Grades 6-8

Supporting Literacy Across the Sunshine State Julie A. Marsh, 2008 Despite recent progress in reading achievement among children in primary grades many children are not moving beyond basic decoding skills to fluency and comprehension as they go on to higher grades To address this problem many policymakers suggest that reading coaches master teachers who offer ongoing on site instructional support for teachers can improve teachers practice and students literacy skills RAND researchers evaluated the middle school reading coach program in Florida to answer these questions How is the program being implemented by the state districts schools and individual coaches What is the impact of coaching on teachers practice and students achievement in reading and mathematics What features of reading coach models and practices are associated with better outcomes

Guiding Advanced Readers in Middle School Teresa Smith Masiello, 2010 Middle school students who are advanced readers need challenge in their language arts curriculum This book helps teachers and parents understand the characteristics and needs of gifted students as well as ways in which to differentiate reading instruction for them It also contains activities for four different trade books that will interest and challenge gifted middle school readers Teachers will enjoy having many reproducible activities to choose from including literature circles tiered activities graphic organizers and higher level thinking discussion questions
