There is a great deal of work to be done in the field of printing and graphic arts. It is a field that is growing rapidly and it is one that offers many opportunities for growth and development.

The graphic printer who has had his work done for years will find it difficult to find the answers. The answers that were formerly available to him are now gone. He must find a way to get his work done. He must find a way to get his work done. He must find a way to get his work done. He must find a way to get his work done.

Exploring an unjustly overlooked figure in 20th-century British visual culture. This book offers a comprehensive overview to the work and legacy of David King, 1943-2016, whose fascinating career bridged journalism, graphic design, photography, and collecting. King launched his career at Britain's Sunday Times Magazine in the 1960s, starting as a designer and later branching out into image-led journalism. He developed a particular interest in revolutionary Russia and began amassing a collection of graphic art and photographs, ultimately accumulating around 250,000 images that he shared with news outlets. Throughout his life, King blended political activism with his graphic design work, creating anti-Apartheid and anti-Nazi posters, covers for books on Communist history, album artwork for The Who and Jimi Hendrix, catalogues on Russian art and society for the Museum of Modern Art in Oxford, and typographic covers for the left-wing magazine City Limits. This well-researched and finely illustrated publication ties together King's accomplishments as a visual historian, artist, journalist, and activist.
