Cross-Linguistic Study of Acquired Reading Disorders Prathibha Karanth, 2012-12-06 The acquisition of reading the teaching of reading and the difficulties encountered have been of substantial interest to a wide range of researchers and practitioners for centuries. Given the increasing centrality of literacy in modern life, they are now of even greater interest to an ever widening base of professionals. The study of the acquired reading disorders though in existence for over a century received enormous impetus with the publication of a seminal paper by Marshall and Newcombe in 1966 leading to neuropsychological model building of reading. Over the last 30 years within the single case study design there has been extensive and exceedingly fine grained research on individuals with acquired disorders of reading in an attempt to establish the validity of these models of reading and the human brain. In addition these models have had considerable influence on models of the acquisition of reading in children and their concomitant difficulties. Much of this research has been in readers of the alphabetic scripts particularly the opaque English script. During the last decade or so there has been increasing evidence particularly in research on reading acquisition that what is true of alphabetic scripts like English may not be universally true of all of the scripts of the world. This has led to considerable research into the process of learning to read and write and on the factors affecting reading which are the touchstone of the models within broader cross linguistic and cross cultural perspectives.
