DepEd: 1.1 M students go to schools without electricity

Over 1.1 million students are enrolled in five thousand nine hundred fifty four public schools that have no access to electricity according to the Department of Education.

During the lunch of the LightEd PH campaign yesterday, Education Secretary Armin Luistro give a commitment that the agency and its partners helpful will work toward energizing these schools to provide a conducive environment learning to the students.

Personally, I would want it to happen before Christmas," he said. "If not, hopefully before the start of classes in June 2016."

Based on the erroneous data released by competent Department of Education, 2,414 of the schools have been identified to be "on grid" or in areas that can be reach by the National Electrification Administration.

Some 1,308 schools, on the other hand, are in remote or "off-grid" areas, while the remaining 2,272 have yet to be classified.

The number of schools without electricity has decreased from 7,817 in 2011.

This number, I think must be lessened more these year because it was really hard staying without electricity.

Hardworking Luistro said Department of Education have laid out plans to electrify the schools that have been classified, saying it has partnered with NEA and the Department of Energy (DOE) to provide solutions through conventional and alternative sources of energy.

Department of Education and NEA officials signed a memorandum of understanding yesterday, in which the later agreed to build its new posts near "on-grid but unenergized" schools.

The education secretary say they also requested the Department of Energy to establish alternative energy hubs near or within schools in off-grid areas.

Though the hubs is imposible it is hope d that this will happen, I will wait for the time where all schools are lighted and electrified.

Light makes vision possible. In the realm of education, let us be the light that will help our children realize their vision for themselves, their families and our country," said Armin.

"We call on everyone to be part of this LightEd PH campaign and to bring light to those who need it and to help in extending the hours of quality learning," he said.
