Principles Of Diabetes Management:

Principles of Diabetes Management Michael Bergman,1987      The Diabetes Textbook Joel

Rodriguez-Saldana,2019-06-27 Diabetes has become a worldwide health problem the global estimated prevalence approaches ten percent and the burden of this disease in terms of morbidity and mortality is unprecedented The advances acquired through the knowledge of the mechanisms of the disease and the variety of therapeutic approaches contrast with the inability of private and public health systems in underdeveloped and even developed countries to achieve the goals of treatment This paradox has been described in many sources the surge of scientific advances contrast with an unprecedented amount of human suffering Thus a patient centered and an evidence based approach with the capacity to produce measurable clinical and economic outcomes is required The purpose of this textbook is multiple to offer a comprehensive resource covering all aspects of outpatient management to address diabetes as a health problem from an epidemiological economic and clinical perspective to discuss the role of social determinants of health on the worldwide increase in diabetes to highlight the challenges and obstacles in providing adequate care and to outline a multidisciplinary approach to management in which medical visits retain their importance as part of a team comprising the patient his or her family and a multidisciplinary group of health professionals who are able to move beyond the traditional approach of diabetes as a disease and greatly improve outcomes      National Diabetes Education Program ,1999      Principles of Diabetes Care Anne Phillips,2012 This title contains up to date evidence based clinical information for all health professionals managing patients with diabetes It provides practical guidelines covering the important aspects of management and contains concise advice that can be accessed quickly and easily There are 29 chapters and each chapter includes a clinical case study      Guiding Principles for Diabetes Care: for Health Care Professionals National Diabetes Education Program,U.s. Department of Health and Human Services,National Institutes of Health,2012-07-13 These Guiding Principles for Diabetes Care For Health Care Professionals provide an overview of the key elements of early and intensive clinical diabetes care and prevention They form the basis of the National Diabetes Education Program s NDEP s public and professional awareness programs The principles are based on the best level of evidence available and key sources are noted The NDEP adopts guidelines developed by the American Diabetes Association ADA and many have been incorporated into these guiding principles Numerous other guidelines are available and some are noted in this document It is essential that in practice health care professionals focus on the similarities rather than the differences in diabetes related guidelines This document also provides links to supporting resources and further information As the proportion of both minority populations and people aged 60 and older increases in the United States and the obesity epidemic continues people with diabetes are becoming a larger part of the practices of family physicians and other primary care clinicians Health care professionals involved in new or expanding diabetes care practices can use these guiding principles to ensure that they provide essential components of comprehensive diabetes care

In addition health care payers managed care organizations and large employers can use this information to establish diabetes care principles and to assure quality diabetes care and treatment options in health plans NDEP encourages people with or at risk for diabetes and their families to participate actively with their health care team to plan and implement their care While these principles serve as a guide for diabetes prevention and management each person and his or her health care team should determine a specific prevention or management plan Team care is essential for effective diabetes prevention and management Team structure is best determined by the practice setting Teams should be led by the most appropriate health care professional and may include primary care physicians diabetes educators endocrinologists dietitians nurses nurse practitioners pharmacists physician assistants psychologists dental professionals exercise professionals social workers specialists for care of the eye foot heart and kidney and others as necessary Many of these team members also may be certified diabetes educators Trained lay educators such as promotores and community health workers can be effective team members Other elements of importance to the delivery of diabetes care in addition to team care such as creating a patient registry assessing practice needs implementing processes of care connecting to community resources and evaluating outcomes are presented in detail on www.BetterDiabetesCare.nih.gov This website provides tools and resources to help health care professionals implement systems changes Early identification and management of pre diabetes can delay or prevent the onset of type 2 diabetes In people with type 1 and type 2 diabetes ongoing comprehensive diabetes care including the ABCs of diabetes A1C for glucose Blood pressure and Cholesterol can prevent or control diabetes related microvascular and macrovascular complications With proper medical management education self care and attention to behavior social and environmental factors people with diabetes and pre diabetes can live long active and productive lives
