Private Health Sector Growth In Asia Issues And Implications:

Private Health Sector Growth in Asia William Newbrander, 1997-08-21 At the end of the twentieth century Asia is in the middle of an economic political and social transformation Many countries are poised to enter the next century on a rising curve of rapid economic growth and human resource development Despite an increasing proportion of national income devoted to health government resources are not sufficient to maintain existing health systems meet increased demand and improve the quality of care Attitudes about the role of government in financing health care services have also changed As a result many countries in Asia have adopted a strategy of encouraging the expansion of the private health sector in health This book describes these policy shifts and the health sector reform issues in the countries of the region The actual process of change in six countries India Indonesia Korea the Philippines Thailand and Vietnam is also documented This collection of papers by eleven leading international experts was prepared for the Asian Development Bank's Second Regional Conference on Health Sector Reform Issues Related to Private Sector Growth held in Manila in 1996 Management Sciences for Health commissioned these papers and managed the conference for the ADB The ADB is a regional multilateral development bank with 58 member countries which provided development assistance through loans and grants to 36 countries in Asia and the Pacific Management Sciences for Health is a non profit organization dedicated to helping health care policy makers and managers develop and implement practical strategies to meet the challenges faced by the public and private sectors of health systems

Health Policy Research in South Asia Abdo Yazbeck, David H. Peters, 2003-01-01 South Asia is a region of contrasts with impressive technological achievements but also more than 40 percent of the world's poor These contrasts are evident in the health sector which demonstrates large variations in health nutrition and fertility outcomes Health Policy Research in South Asia showcases some of the innovative qualitative and quantitative research methodologies being used in South Asia to provide empirical guidance for health sector reform and policy development The four research areas presented are analysis of inequality expenditure analysis private sector analysis and consumer and provider perspectives Salient themes emerge from the 12 health policy research activities reviewed and emphasize the importance of strengthening local capacity and building ownership Governments can and should distribute subsidies in the health sector more efficiently and effectively The private sector which dominates service delivery in most of South Asia requires a different set of public sector policy instruments Informed consumers citizens can and should play an important role in influencing health service delivery Empirical research can and should provide policymakers with some of the tools needed to improve and monitor the performance of the sector This book will be of interest to health sector policymakers and analysts to academics and students in public health and health economics and to anyone with an interest in the impact of health policy on development

China: Bioethics, Trust, and the Challenge of the Market J. Tao Lai Po-wah, 2008-07-08 to the Moral Challenges H Tristram Engelhardt Jr and Aaron E Hinkley 1 Taking Finitude Seriously in a Chinese Cultural Context Across the world health care policy is a moral and political challenge Few want to die young or to suffer yet not all the money in the world can deliver physical immortality or a life free of suffering In addition health care needs differ As a result unless a state coercively forbids those with the desire and means to buy better basic health care to do so access to medicine will be unequal No one can afford to provide all with the best of care In countries such as China there are in addition stark regional differences in the quality and availability of health care posing additional challenges to public policy making Further in China as elsewhere the desire to lower morbidity and mortality risks has led to ever more resources being invested in health care When such investment is supported primarily by funds derived from taxation an increasing burden is placed on a country's economy This is particularly the case as in China with its one child policy where the proportion of the elderly population consuming health care is rising These policy challenges are compounded by moral diversity De facto humans do not share one morality Instead they rank cardinal human goods and right making conditions in different orders often not sharing an affirmation of the same goods or views of the right
