Unsafe abortion contributes significantly to maternal mortality and morbidity in Latin America. Postabortion care (PAC) using preferred technologies and a woman-centred approach to treat the complications of unsafe abortion can save women's lives and improve their reproductive health, as well as reduce costs to health systems. This article reviews results from 10 major PAC operations research projects conducted in public sector hospitals in seven Latin American countries, completed and published between 1991 and 2002. The studies show that following relatively modest interventions, the majority of eligible patients were being treated with manual vacuum aspiration (MVA), a method preferred for safety and other reasons over the method conventionally used in the region, sharp curettage (SC). A number of studies showed improvements in contraceptive counselling and services when these were integrated with clinical treatment of abortion complications, resulting in substantial increases in contraceptive acceptance. Finally, data from several studies showed that, in most settings, reorganizing services by moving treatment out of the operating theatre and reclassifying treatment as an ambulatory care procedure substantially reduced the resources used for PAC, as well as the cost and average length of women's stay in the hospital. These studies suggest that comprehensive PAC can and should be available to all women in Latin America. Such efforts should be coupled with work to improve primary prevention, including better contraceptive services to prevent unwanted pregnancy and safe, legal abortion services to reduce the number of clandestine and unsafe abortions.

Key words: postabortion care, unsafe abortion, manual vacuum aspiration

Introduction

Unsafe abortion, defined as a procedure for terminating an unintended pregnancy either by persons lacking the necessary skills or in an environment lacking the minimal medical standards, or both, poses significant risks to women's health and lives (WHO 2003). Throughout Latin America and the Caribbean, abortion laws are restrictive, and clandestine, often unsafe, abortion is common. Notable exceptions are Cuba and Guyana where abortion is legal for a wide range of indications. An estimated 3.7 million unsafe abortions take place each year in the region, with an abortion rate of 29 per 1000 women of reproductive age or almost one unsafe abortion to every three live births (WHO 2002). WHO (2004) estimates that 15% of unsafe abortions are among women aged 15 to 19, 29% among women aged 20 to 24, and 56% among women aged 25 to 49. In the region approximately 3700 women die each year from unsafe abortion. For every death, many more women experience injuries and disabilities requiring emergency medical treatment. Most mortality and morbidity figures are underestimates since they tend to exclude women who do not utilize formal public health services. In addition, many abortions go unreported even within public sector health services.

Yet mortality and morbidity resulting from unsafe abortion are preventable. Safe surgical and medical approaches to induce abortion are highly effective and present little risk to women (Grimes 1997; Dudley 2000; WHO 2004). However, where women do not have access to safe induced abortions, prompt postabortion care (PAC) can at least save their lives and afford them opportunities to prevent unintended pregnancies in the future through contraceptive counselling and services. At the 1994 International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD), governments endorsed PAC as an essential response to the public health problem of unsafe abortion. A PAC model developed by Ipas, an international reproductive health organization, was subsequently introduced by civil society organizations and national health systems in developing countries, often with significant funding from donors such as the U.S. Agency for International Development, the British Department for International Development, and various private foundations (Greenstone et al. 1994; Corbett and Turner 2003). The three main components are:

- (1) Prompt treatment of complications from unsafe (or spontaneous) abortion that are potentially life-threatening, using manual vacuum aspiration (MVA) or other preferred methods;
- (2) Offering contraceptive counselling and methods to help women achieve their reproductive intentions and avoid repeat abortions;
- (3) Offering on-site, or through referral, other reproductive health services needed by women experiencing abortion complications.

A recent revision of the PAC model makes explicit two additional elements that render PAC services more effective in meeting women's needs: general counselling to identify and respond to women's emotional and physical health

Cook, Bernard M. Dickens, Mahmoud F. Fathalla, 2003-04-17 The concept of reproductive health promises to play a crucial role in improving women's health and rights around the world. It was internationally endorsed by a United Nations conference in 1994 but remains controversial because of the challenge it presents to conservative agencies; it challenges policies of suppressing public discussion on human sexuality and regulating its private expressions. Reproductive Health and Human Rights is designed to equip healthcare providers and administrators to integrate ethical, legal and human rights principles in protection and promotion of reproductive health and to inform lawyers and women's health advocates about aspects of medicine and healthcare systems that affect reproduction. Rebecca Cook, Bernard Dickens and Mahmoud Fathalla, leading international authorities on reproductive medicine, human rights, medical law and bioethics, integrate their disciplines to provide an accessible but comprehensive introduction to reproductive and sexual health. They analyse fifteen case studies of recurrent problems focusing particularly on resource-poor settings. Approaches to resolution are considered at clinical and health system levels. They also consider kinds of social change that would relieve the underlying conditions of reproductive health dilemmas. Supporting the explanatory chapters and case studies are extensive resources of epidemiological data, human rights documents and research materials and websites on reproductive and sexual health. In explaining ethics, law and human rights to healthcare providers and administrators and reproductive health to lawyers and women's health advocates, the authors explore and illustrate limitations and dysfunctions of prevailing health systems and their legal regulation but also propose opportunities for reform. They draw on the values and principles of ethics and human rights recognized in national and international legal systems to guide healthcare providers and administrators, lawyers, governments and national and international agencies and legal tribunals. Reproductive Health and Human Rights will be an invaluable resource for all those working to improve services and legal protection for women around the world. Updates to this book and information on translations to French, Spanish, Portuguese, Chinese and Arabic are now available at www.law.utoronto.ca/faculty/cook/ReproductiveHealth.html. Seminar, 2003. International Family Planning Perspectives, 2003. Contemporary Obstetrics and Gynaecology for Developing Countries Friday Okonofua, Kunle Odunsi, 2003. The authors further advocate that for publishing development to be sustained, more sophisticated government policies and resources are required. They conclude that a triangular relationship taking in government, development agencies and the private sector can provide the basis for a healthy book trade in Africa.
