
POSTMORTEM CHANGE IN HUMAN AND ANIMAL REMAINS

A Systematic Approach

MARC S. MICOZZI, M.D., Ph.D.

*Director
National Museum of Health and Medicine
Associate Director
Armed Forces Institute of Pathology
Washington, D.C.*

This book provides a unique, synthetic treatment of postmortem change presented in a systematic fashion with attention to the relative chronologies of both physical and cultural factors that influence human and animal remains. The author integrates reports and observations in the anthropology/archaeology literature with material as appropriate from medicine, pathology, paleopathology, ethnography and the forensic sciences as well as reporting on his own original observations. In addition to discussing transformation of skeletal remains, comprehensive treatment is given to changes in soft tissue remains and to conditions under which said remains may be preserved postmortem. This book "fills in the blanks" where pathology has traditionally left off and before anthropology has traditionally begun with an integrated review of what anthropology traditionally considers. More and more anthropologists and forensic scientists are called upon to systematically interpret postmortem changes "from beginning to end," cutting across various fields of study. This is the first book to explore, explain and interpret all these aspects of postmortem change.

Micozzi, 1986 Understanding the processes of postmortem change in biologic systems is important to the forensic sciences Previous experimental studies of postmortem change in animals under field conditions made use of animal carcasses that had been incidentally exposed to the effects of freezing and thawing or mechanical damage or both and were limited to gross observations The current study was designed to document intrinsic processes of postmortem change and the effects of freezing thawing and mechanical injury under controlled conditions in the field using histologic and microbiologic techniques as well as gross observation Insect and microbiologic succession sequences and patterns of decomposition and disarticulation were observable over time Previously frozen thawed animals showed predominantly decay aerobic decomposition in the field while freshly killed animals showed predominantly putrefaction anaerobic decomposition Previously frozen animals showed the same sequence but accelerated rates of disarticulation Mechanically injured tissues showed accelerated rates of decomposition These findings have implications for the interpretation of results of previous studies as well as the interpretation of human and animal remains subjected to freezing and thawing Late Postmortem Changes in Three Human Bodies in Knox County, Tennessee Lorna Lea Watkins, 1983

Defining Postmortem Changes in Western Montana Tory Nicole Huey, 2013 Estimating time since death is difficult because of the multitude of factors that can alter postmortem change Initial research conducted in western Montana indicates that decomposition does not follow the patterns found in other geographic locations The purpose of this study is to better define how western Montana's unique environmental factors affect the rate and pattern of decomposition of surface remains and buried remains In May 2012 one mature pig Sus scrofa was placed on the surface and a second pig was buried Throughout a nine month period the following variables were monitored for the surface pig rate and pattern of decomposition climatic variables internal temperature and entomological activity The following variables were monitored for the buried pig ambient temperature internal temperature relative humidity vegetation changes pH levels animal patterns and insects The results from this study indicate that regardless of whether a body is deposited on the surface or buried mummification of external tissues occurs and is persistent for at least nine months in the absence of animal scavenging The ultimate result of this study contributes to building a baseline data set for documenting decomposition in western Montana s cool and arid climate
