

and demoralization may have cost as many as 11,000 Filipino lives and made the population susceptible to the cholera epidemic of 1902" thanks to General J. Franklin Bell's concentration camps, "his own grim contribution to the war" (p. 155). He concludes, with suspect evenhandedness, quoting May this time, "It was, on both sides, an ugly guerrilla war" (p. 160). This example indicates how a conscientious historian was, because of the focus or perspective chosen, unintentionally led to emphasize the totality of U.S. actions and the fundamental moderateness of the soldiers and their officers as they tried to end a war as quickly and humanely as possible. This is not Linn's fault—he is quite open about writing a book on U.S. military history—but it should be made explicit in any review of his otherwise useful contribution.

Linn has worked hard and well. I admire the quality of his regional emphasis. As a Philippine historian my concerns are different from his; he of course made no pretense to be writing Philippine history. His work is useful, but it reminds us that different perspectives lead to quite different sorts of history.

Postwar Vietnam: Dilemmas in Socialist Development. Edited by DAVID G. MARR and CHRISTINE P. WHITE. Ithaca: Cornell University, Southeast Asia Program, 1988. xii, 248 pp.

This collection, which treats an important and somewhat neglected theme, is the product of a conference held in Sussex, England, in 1985. It contains a number of useful studies. Chapters by David Marr and by Suzanne Rubin provide valuable insight into the state of the postwar educational system. Nguyen Huu Chau traces the history of the Vietnamese family-planning program, first inaugurated in 1963 but given serious attention only in recent years. Carlyle Thayer and William Turley provide penetrating analyses of the changing patterns of leadership within the party and the role of the military in contemporary Vietnamese society.

The bulk of the chapters, however, focus on the economic situation. This is perhaps inevitable, given the virtual state of crisis that has characterized the Vietnamese economy since unification in 1976. As the editors point out, the broad outlines of that crisis are well known. Hanoi's attempt to build an advanced socialist society on the basis of bureaucratic centralism and collectivized agriculture has led to economic stagnation and a murderous inflation rate. Compounding the problem have been the high cost of occupying Cambodia and an economic boycott by the West. Faced with a serious loss of public confidence in its leadership, the Vietnamese Communist party elected a new general secretary in December 1986 and launched a reform program along the lines of the perestroika campaign in the Soviet Union.

For the most part, the studies in this volume confirm these impressions. In a chapter on Vietnam's most recent five-year plans, Vo Nhan Tri documents the overly ambitious developmental goals of party planners in the immediate postwar period. Melanie Beresford discusses the problems encountered in unifying the two zones after the end of the Vietnam War and shows that, in many instances, it has been the capitalist south that has influenced the socialist north, rather than vice versa. Max Spoor traces the halting and painful shift from a system based on central controls to one based on "socialist economic accounting." Ngo Vinh Long, using official data on socialist transformation in the Mekong Delta, shows that the "great momentum" claimed by the regime in building collectives in the south was actually just a numbers game. Reconfiguring Families in Contemporary Vietnam Danièle Bélanger, Magali Barbieri, 2009-03-18 Reconfiguring Families in Contemporary Vietnam chronicles and analyzes the most significant change for families in Vietnam's recent past the transition to a market economy referred to as Doi Moi in Vietnamese and generally translated as the renovation Two decades have passed since the wide ranging institutional transformations that took place reconfigured the ways families produce and reproduce The downsizing of the socialist welfare system and the return of the household as the unit of production and consumption redefined the boundaries between the public and private This volume is the first to offer a multidisciplinary perspective that sets its gaze exclusively on processes at work in the everyday lives of families and on the implications for gender and intergenerational relations By focusing on families this book shifts the spotlight from macro transformations of the renovation era orchestrated by those in power to micro level transformations experienced daily in households between husbands and wives parents and children grandparents and other family members Rethinking Vietnam Duncan McCargo, 2004 Drawing on fieldwork and analysis by an international team of specialists this book covers all aspects of contemporary Vietnam including recent history the political economy the reform process education health labor market foreign direct investment and foreign policy Wards of Hanoi David Wee Hock Koh, 2006 In this book the author marshals evidence to support an arena specific approach towards viewing Vietnam's state society relations In practice the Vietnamese party state's relations with society vary from the hard and uncompromising state with the bureaucracy getting its way to society's ability to negotiate the state's boundaries and regimes to make them less harsh Any analysis of Vietnam's state society relations needs to recognize and demonstrate both elements of dominance and accommodation as well as specify the context in which either or both are seen Alone neither is adequate In particular the idea of the state needs to be disaggregated because state is not a singular actor that is coherent or uniform through time and space To demonstrate how state disaggregation can make our view more nuanced this book analyses state society interaction at the ward level of Hanoi an urban local authority Hanoi William Stewart Logan, 2000 This text traces the history of the fabric of Hanoi from its origins 1000 years ago It examines how the shape of the city reflects changing political cultural and economic conditions over a millennium of intermittent warfare and waves of cultural change and migration Drawing on his experience as heritage advisor the author looks at the challenges facing those who seek to preserve the best features of Hanoi's architecture and streetscapes while improving the living conditions of its residents Economic Transition in Vietnam Melanie Beresford, Dang Phong, 2000-12-20 The authors show how development of non plan trading relations was based on supplies of scarce aid subsidised goods which provided the means for local authorities enterprises and individuals to convert their positions of political and social power into capital They further highlight the ways in which new market oriented trade relations emerged in symbiosis with the planning system and continue to influence the economic structure and institutions today Economic Transition in Vietnam outlines the many problems currently facing Vietnam not least how new global forms of integration are affecting future development BOOK JACKET Politics in Contemporary Vietnam J. London, 2014-05-13 Vietnam's political development has entered an extraordinary if indeterminate phase Comprising contributions from leading Vietnam scholars this volume comprehensively explores the core aspects of Vietnam's politics providing a cutting edge analysis of politics in one of East Asia's least understood countries Essential Trade Ann Marie Leshkovich, 2014-09-30 My husband doesn't have a head for business complained Ngoc the owner of a children's clothing stall in Ben Thanh market. Naturally it's because he's a man. When the women who sell in Ho Chi Minh City's iconic marketplace speak their language suggests that activity in the market is shaped by timeless essential truths. Vietnamese women are naturally adept at buying and selling while men are not. Vietnamese prefer to do business with family members or through social contacts. Stallholders are by nature superstitious. Marketplace trading is by definition a small scale enterprise. Essential Trade looks through the facade of these timeless truths and finds active participants in a political economy of appearances. Traders' words and actions conform to stereotypes of themselves as poor weak women in order to clinch sales, manage creditors and protect themselves from accusations of being greedy, corrupt or bourgeois even as they quietly slip into southern Vietnam's growing middle class. But Leshkovich argues that we should not dismiss the traders' self-disparaging words simply because of their essentialist logic. In Ben Thanh market performing certain styles of femininity, kinship relations, social networks, spirituality and class allowed traders to portray themselves as particular kinds of people who had the capacity to act in volatile political and economic circumstances. When so much seems to be changing, a claim that certain things or people are inherently or naturally a particular way can be both personally meaningful and strategically advantageous. Based on ethnographic fieldwork and life history interviewing conducted over nearly two decades, Essential Trade explores how women cloth and clothing traders like Ngoc have plied their wares through four decades of political and economic transformation: civil war, postwar economic restructuring, socialist cooperativization and the frenetic competition of market socialism. With close attention to daily activities and life narratives, this groundbreaking work of critical feminist economic anthropology combines theoretical insight, vivid ethnography and moving personal stories to illuminate how the interaction between gender and class has shaped people's lives and created market socialist political economy. It provides a compelling account of postwar southern Vietnam as seen through the eyes of the dynamic women who have navigated forty years of profound change while building their businesses in the stalls of Ben Thanh market.
