ABOUT LIFELINE: Lifeline is one of the oldest charities working with and on behalf of drug users in Britain. Lifeline's philosophy is one of moral neutrality in relation to the use of drugs. Lifeline's view of drug use is 'agnostic'; we neither believe that the use of drugs is an intrinsically bad or good thing to do. We would like to emphasise that none of the arguments or evidence in this book are intended to condone or promote the use of cannabis- nor, equally, are they intended to invalidate or discourage the use of this drug. That's your decision. Lifeline sees no point in adopting a strong moral position in relation to the use of drugs. There are many within the drugs field who believe that drug use is a modern representation of 'evil'. Similarly, there are just as many who believe that drugs are a positive force for good in a world of great uncertainty and insecurity. Anti-drug agencies and pro-drug agencies are both prone to exaggerate or distort reality to suit their own ends. The only belief that Lifeline holds as a corporate moral philosophy is a commitment to tell the truth about drugs and drug users.
