

CHAPTER I

On a snowy morning, three days before Christmas in 1885, five men gather in a small gas-lit office on the sixth floor of Cyrus Hall McCormick's Reaper Block in the heart of Chicago's teeming business district.

They have come together to formalize the start of a new business for which a state charter was granted twelve days earlier. Foremost among them are the Goss brothers—Fred, a printing plant foreman with the flair of a master salesman, and Sam, a pressman in a plant that turns out colorful posters advertising circuses and train excursions—and Jacob Walser, a well-to-do railroad ticket broker who is the main financial backer of the Gosses' inventive plan to produce a new and improved kind of newspaper printing press. The others are Benjamin Babcock, a local periodical publisher, and David Alland, an attorney representing the interests of Babcock's independently wealthy wife, Julia, a major outside investor in the Gosses' enterprise.

The men stand about for a time talking about the wintry weather and politics, particularly about how President Grover Cleveland, the first Democrat in the White House in 24 years, continues to replace Republican job-holders with loyalists in his own party. They take an occasional look out a window at John Van Osdel's recently-built County Building-City Hall across the street, where buoyant Mayor Carter Harrison reigns after his re-election in April for an unprecedented fourth term, in a city where corruption and gambling still flourish along with raucous complaints from reformers and newspapers, but also a city whose remarkable resurgence from the ravages of the Great Fire of 1871 has not slackened, in spite of periodic economic woes and rumbles of intensified conflict between labor and capital.

Walser asks the others to seat themselves at the heavy oak table in the center of the room and calls the meeting to order. On Fred Goss' unopposed motion, Walser is chosen chairman of the meeting and, on Babcock's motion, Fred its secretary.

"The first order of business," declares

One of the early logotypes of the company formed by Frederick and Samuel Goss, with the financial backing of Jacob Walser.

Death Be Not Proud David Marno,2016-12-21 The seventeenth century French philosopher Nicolas Malebranche thought that philosophy could learn a valuable lesson from prayer which teaches us how to attend wait and be open for what might happen next Death Be Not Proud explores the precedents of Malebranche s advice by reading John Donne s poetic prayers in the context of what David Marno calls the art of holy attention If in Malebranche s view attention is a hidden bond between religion and philosophy devotional poetry is the area where this bond becomes visible Marno shows that in works like Death be not proud Donne s most triumphant poem about the resurrection the goal is to allow the poem s speaker to experience a given doctrine as his own thought as an idea occurring to him But while the thought must feel like an unexpected event for the speaker the poem itself is a careful preparation for it And the key to this preparation is attention the only state in which the speaker can perceive the doctrine as a cognitive gift Along the way Marno illuminates why attention is required in Christian devotion in the first place and uncovers a tradition of battling distraction that spans from ascetic thinkers and Church Fathers to Catholic spiritual exercises and Protestant prayer manuals
