

The Text REtrieval Conferences (TREC)

Dennis Burman

National Institute of Standards and Technology
Gaithersburg, MD 20899

There have been four Text Retrieval Conferences (TREC): TREC-1 in November 1992, TREC-2 in August 1993, TREC-3 in November 1994 and TREC-4 in November 1995. The number of participating systems has grown from 22 in TREC-1 to 34 in TREC-4, including about 10 of the major IR research laboratory components and most of the universities doing research in text retrieval (see table for name of the participants). The diversity of the participating groups has assured that TREC represents many different approaches to text retrieval, while the emphasis on individual experiments evaluated in a common setting has proven to be a major strength of TREC.

The test design and test collection used for document detection in TREC-1 was also used in TREC. The participants ran the various tests, that results were NOT for evaluation, presented the results at the TREC conferences, and submitted papers for a proceedings. The test collection consists of over 1 million documents from diverse full-text sources, 250 topics, and the set of relevant documents or "right answers" to those topics. A Spanish collection has been built and used during TREC-3 and TREC-4, with a total of 58 topics.

TREC-1 required significant system retooling by most groups due to the huge increase in the size of the document collection (from a traditional test collection of several megabytes in size to the 2 gigabyte TREC-1 collection). The results from TREC-2 showed significant improvements over the TREC-1 results, and should be viewed as the appropriate baseline representing state-of-the-art retrieval techniques as tested up to handling a 2 gigabyte collection.

TREC-3 thereafter provided the first opportunity for more complex experiments. The major experiments in TREC-3 included the development of automatic query expansion techniques, the use of passages or sub-documents to increase the precision of retrieval results, and the use of the testing information to select only the best terms for scoring queries. Some groups explored hybrid approaches such as the use of the Rocchio methodology in systems not using a vector space model, and others tried approaches that were radically different from their original approaches.

TREC-4 allowed a continuation of many of these complex experiments. The topics were made much shorter and this change triggered intensive investigations in automatic query expansion. There were also five new tests, called tracks. These were added to help focus research on certain known problem areas, and included both intensive investigating searching as an information task by determining the process as well as the outcome, investigating techniques for merging results from the various TREC subcollections, examining the effects of corrupted data, and evaluating routing systems using a specific effectiveness measure. Additionally more groups participated in a track for Spanish systems.

The TREC conferences have proven to be very successful, allowing broad participation in the overall DART, TREC-1 effort, and causing widespread use of a very large test collection. All conferences have had very open, honest discussions of technical issues, and there have been large amounts of "cross-fertilization" of ideas. This will be a continuing effort, with a TREC-5 conference scheduled in November of 1996.

Natural Language Information Retrieval T. Strzalkowski, 2013-04-17 The last decade has been one of dramatic progress in the field of Natural Language Processing NLP This hitherto largely academic discipline has found itself at the center of an information revolution ushered in by the Internet age as demand for human computer communication and information access has exploded Emerging applications in computer assisted information production and dissemination automated understanding of news understanding of spoken language and processing of foreign languages have given impetus to research that resulted in a new generation of robust tools systems and commercial products Well positioned government research funding particularly in the U S has helped to advance the state of the art at an unprecedented pace in no small measure thanks to the rigorous 1 evaluations This volume focuses on the use of Natural Language Processing in In formation Retrieval IR an area of science and technology that deals with cataloging categorization classification and search of large amounts of information particularly in textual form An outcome of an information retrieval process is usually a set of documents containing information on a given topic and may consist of newspaper like articles memos reports of any kind entire books as well as annotated image and sound files Since we assume that the information is primarily encoded as text IR is also a natural language processing problem in order to decide if a document is relevant to a given information need one needs to be able to understand its content

Advances in Information Retrieval W. Bruce Croft, 2006-04-11 The Center for Intelligent Information Retrieval CIIR was formed in the Computer Science Department of the University of Massachusetts Amherst in 1992 The core support for the Center came from a National Science Foundation State Industry University Cooperative Research Center S IUCRC grant although there had been a sizeable information retrieval IR research group for over 10 years prior to that grant The basic goal of these Centers is to combine basic research applied research and technology transfer The CIIR has been successful in each of these areas in that it has produced over 270 research papers has been involved in many successful government and industry collaborations and has had a significant role in high visibility Internet sites and start ups As a result of these efforts the CIIR has become known internationally as one of the leading research groups in the area of information retrieval The CIIR focuses on research that results in more effective and efficient access and discovery in large heterogeneous distributed text and multimedia databases The scope of the work that is done in the CIIR is broad and goes significantly beyond traditional areas of information retrieval such as retrieval models cross lingual search and automatic query expansion The research includes both low level systems issues such as the design of protocols and architectures for distributed search as well as more human centered topics such as user interface design visualization and data mining with text and multimedia retrieval

Information Retrieval David A. Grossman, Ophir Frieder, 2012-12-06 Information Retrieval Algorithms and Heuristics is a comprehensive introduction to the study of information retrieval covering both effectiveness and run time performance The focus of the presentation is on algorithms and heuristics used to find documents relevant to the user request and to find them fast Through multiple examples the most commonly used algorithms and heuristics needed are tackled To facilitate understanding and applications introductions to and discussions of computational linguistics natural language processing probability theory and library and computer science are provided While this text focuses on algorithms and not on commercial product per se the basic strategies used by many commercial products are described Techniques that can be used to find information on the Web as well as in other large information collections are included This volume is an invaluable resource for researchers practitioners
