Early Detection Kirsten E. Gardner,2006-12-08 Dispelling the common notion that American women became activists in the fight against female cancer only after the 1970s Kirsten E Gardner traces women's cancer education campaigns back to the early twentieth century Focusing on breast cancer but using research on cervical ovarian and uterine cancers as well Gardner's examination of films publications health fairs and archival materials shows that women have promoted early cancer detection since the inception of the American Society for the Control of Cancer in 1913 While informing female audiences about cancer risks these early activists also laid the groundwork for the political advocacy and patient empowerment movements of recent decades By the 1930s there were 300 000 members of the Women's Field Army working together with women's clubs They held explicit discussions about the risks detection and incidence of cancer and by mid century were offering advice about routine breast self exams and annual Pap smears The feminist health movement of the 1970s Gardner explains heralded a departure for female involvement in women's health activism As before women encouraged early detection but they simultaneously demanded increased attention to gender and medical research patient experiences and causal factors Our understanding of today's vibrant feminist health movement is enriched by Gardner's work recognizing women's roles in grassroots educational programs throughout the twentieth century and their creation of supportive networks that endure today

Partnership for Health Christina S. Beck,Sandra L. Ragan,Athena du Pre,,Athena du Pre,2013-11-05 In the 1960s feminists voiced their outrage about the health care system in the United States which routinely discriminated against women and in so doing literally jeopardized their health and well being Over a decade later women's health advocates still stressed the need for reform of this male dominated institution because of the on going threat to the health of American women In the 1990s nearly 40 years after women began their fight for quality and equitable treatment from the medical profession women unfortunately continue to confront problems on numerous levels including discrimination in medical research and in the availability of insurance and health care providers. Most alarming however is the fact that women today like women in the 60s and before lack information understanding and adequate diagnoses and treatment from their health caregivers. This book extends from a program of research on women's health issues by the authors. More than 150 audio taped naturally occurring interactions between health caregivers and their female patients from three different health care settings as well as ethnographic field notes in three additional settings which provide health care to women constitute the data for this investigation. They explore the consequentiality of relational issues during women's health care encounters and examine how health care participants save face enact roles co construct their encounters and accomplish the objective of education and medical care. Unlike earlier works this study utilizes an extensive data collection derived directly from hundreds of interactions between health care providers and their patients as opposed to surveys or case studies of singular practitioners. The authors examine the data in light of insights from a variety of theoretical perspectives and are committed to exploring the implication that medical encounters are collaboratively managed by both patients and caregivers. Given these theoretical and empirical contributions the authors believe this book will advance present understanding in the areas of health and relational communication women's health care gender issues in communication conversation analysis discourse processes and institutional talk. Interrupted Life Rickie Solinger, Paula C. Johnson, Martha L. Raimon, Tina Reynolds, Ruby Tapia, 2010-01-25. Interrupted Life is a gripping collection of writings by and about imprisoned women in the United States a country that jails a larger percentage of its population than any other nation in the world. This eye opening work brings together scores of voices from both inside and outside the prison system including incarcerated and previously incarcerated women their advocates and allies abolitionists academics and other analysts. In vivid often highly personal essays poems stories reports and manifestos they offer an unprecedented view of the realities of women's experiences as they try to sustain relations with children and family on the outside struggle for healthcare fight to define and achieve basic rights deal with irrational sentencing systems remake life after prison and more. Together these powerful writings are an intense and visceral examination of life behind bars for women and taken together they underscore the failures of imagination and policy that have too often underwritten our current prison system.
