Decker, 1990 In a foreword to this document David Mathews president of the Charles F Kettering Foundation describes in what ways effective communities are different from ineffective ones Following an introduction a section on school use suggests that most schools offer nothing to adults without children so it should be no surprise that many adults are often less willing to support schools and to pay the taxes needed to fund them Other sections suggest that schools should be used as community centers full time year round and that community involvement results in increased academic achievement improved school climate and more effective communities Community needs and the goals of community education are discussed and the principles and results of community education are listed The principles include self determination self help leadership development localization integrated delivery of services maximum use of resources inclusiveness responsiveness and lifelong learning Tips on how to get community education started and a sample school board resolution favoring community education appear in a section called Getting Started and this is followed by a list of components of community education programs tips on funding options ongoing assessment and successful public relations and brief descriptions of some communities that have successful community education programs including Bowling Green Kentucky Floyd County Indiana and San Antonio Texas The last sections outline the characteristics of effective learning communities and tell where to get more information CML Lifelong Learning in the Community Horace B. Learning and Development moves behind the policy rhetoric to recognise and explore some of the tensions in current policy trends particularly the danger of seeing social marginalisation and exclusion as an individual problem rather than a result of structured inequalities A number of community education learning and development projects are examined to give a real sense of the approach being advocated and to make a case for a model of lifelong learning focusing on democratic renewal The task of community educators and those concerned with learning and development is not an easy one They must recognise competing interests but still enable voices that have been excluded to be heard whilst also seeking ways of building mutual understandings and cooperation The challenge for community education is considerable but this book provides a real sense of its possibilities for learning and development throughout life
