

that at first mixing it will not work, but after standing a day or two it will work well, while at other times it will work immediately. If the holes come too large from an excess of turpentine, (for they will sometimes come too large from not having enough,) add a little more gall and some fresh indigo, putting in a few drops of alum-water; but be very careful of this; for, if there be too much, it will make the colour thick and dotted: in which case have recourse to a little of the solution of potash; but it is best, if possible, to do without either of them.

NO. 7.—LIGHT ITALIAN.

A very pretty though simple pattern, but requires great steadiness of working to turn it out well. The colours being ground as before directed, proceed to mix them with gall and water only, as though they were fat colours. The last colour is white; this requires a greater proportion of gall than the other colours, and a larger brush, as in the French patterns.

After skimming the size, proceed by beating or knocking on the colours—viz.: red, green, and black, as in small French, taking especial care to have the edges of the brushes free from any accumulation of colour, or they will cause large spots or
