

David model of strategic management process

Following slide depicts David's strategic model having three stages namely strategy formulation, implementation and evaluation. It also includes SWOT analysis model's benefits and drawbacks

According to Fred David's strategic model, strategic management process comprises three stages- strategy formulation, strategy implementation and strategy evaluation

Major benefits

- Shows, uses all the major steps that must be completed during the process
- Shows that the process is an ongoing activity
- Arrows represent the two-way process, indicating that companies may sometimes go a step or two back in the process rather than completing the process and starting over from the beginning
- Add text here

Major drawbacks

- Represents only strategy formulation stage
- Strategy evaluation stage is mixed up with the strategy monitoring stage
