3.1.2. Software: The software is the interfacing medium between the courseware developer and the hardware. In multimedia presentation the software is required capture text, images, sounds, animations in a single digital environment. The software that does this is called the authoring software [15].

- The authoring software chosen to develop the courseware is Macromedia Authorware 6.0. This software was chosen because of the following factors: a) Easy to learn. All contents are kept inside an icon and there is no complex programming; b) Cross-platform compatibility; c) Icon based flowchart allows program structure to be seen. There is no need for complex programming knowledge to operate the software; c) Supports animation developed in Macromedia Director and Macromedia Flash; d) Supports GIF animations and e) Ease of troubleshooting errors in program.

3.2. Courseware Development

- The development of the courseware can be divided into four stages. The four stages are planning, design, building and evaluation.

3.2.1. Planning: The software is the interfacing medium between the courseware developer and the hardware. In multimedia presentation the software is required capture text, images, sounds, animations in a single digital environment. The software that does this is called the authoring software [14, 15, 18]. This is the initial stage in any multimedia presentation development. In this stage the need for a multimedia courseware is identified while the mission and objective of the courseware was defined. The mission and objective statement is important as it will act as guide in the development process and also will be use a benchmark in evaluating the final product. The target group for the courseware is also defined in this process. It is important that the courseware developed delivers the information to the target group. Apart from these the planning process also includes the following: a) Identifying the problems; b) Finding solution to the problems; c) Deciding on the design objective; d) Deciding and choosing the content for the courseware; e) Deciding on the suitability of the courseware design and e) Deciding on the time and cost needed to develop the courseware.

- The planning process can be compared to a road map that gives direction that need to be taken. It is vital that the planning process is given extra attention.
