and the painter's job was to keep it from rusting. He would start at one end and slowly proceed day by day, month by month toward the other end, painting the bridge. But no sooner would he finish with the painting than the bridge would begin to rust again. The rust too would start at one end and slowly proceed toward the other end, systematically destroying the painter's endeavor. And so the painter would return to where he had started and begin painting again, slowly proceeding toward the other end of the bridge, always just one step ahead of the rust. And if the story is true, the painter might still be painting that bridge, a modern Sisyphus. During the writing of this book, the story of the painter and his bridge kept coming to mind. The field the book covers has been developing so rapidly that like the painter, I too had to return to where I had started and fight the rust of obsolescence. But unlike the painter, I had a deadline to meet, which constituted a point of no return. And so, sending off this manuscript, I have no choice but to watch the fruits of my endeavor be overtaken by the rust.

This volume deals specifically with those antituberculosis drugs which passed the preclinical phase and have been or are used in the treatment of tuberculosis and other mycobacterial diseases, except leprosy, in at least some parts of the world. Despite this restriction, there are 14 such drugs, and as a result, this volume has reached rather large proportions. To prevent it from becoming even larger and more unwieldy, most derivatives of antituberculoics have been omitted, especially where it is claimed that they provide only better bioavailability or tolerability. Only in the chapter on the chemotherapy of diseases due to so-called atypical mycobacteria is the clinical use of the drugs described to a certain extent. In addition to antituberculoics, also discussed are antimicrobials which have been found to be effective against these mycobacteria. The sequence in which the drugs are described is historical, reflecting not the time of discovery but rather the first clinical application. This order was selected for reasons which are now no longer relevant. In this volume, less emphasis is placed on detection, biological or synthetic production of antituberculoics, and structure-activity relationships. In contrast, emphasis is put on the degree, type, and mechanism of antimycobacterial activity, pharmacokinetics, and biotransformation in animals and man, on experimental pharmacodynamics, and on the toxicity of antituberculoics used therapeutically. Pet Business, 1993-06. Mouse Models of Human Cancer Eric C.
