Imperialism

I. The New Manifest Destiny

With the closing of the frontier, many Americans began to call for expansion outside of the continent. Europeans were involved in imperialism and the U.S. felt they needed to take their place among the world's leaders. Also, the ideas of Social Darwinism were applied to world affairs. It is natural law that stronger nations will dominate weaker ones. From 1870-1900 Europeans gobbled up 20% of the earth's land and 10% of its population. People feared that our natural resources would run out. The social turmoil of the 1890's led to a call for imperialism, and the increasing importance of trade led to a call for new markets. In 1870 our exports totaled $392 million, in 1890 they were $857 million, and in 1900 they had risen to $1.4 billion. Admiral Alfred Thayer Mahan was a strong proponent of imperialism. He believed sea power was the key to a nation's strength, and he called for a canal to be built to connect the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific ocean.

II. Monroe Doctrine and Open Door Policy

Since the time of James Monroe (1820's) we had been asserting our dominion over the Western Hemisphere. We made it clear that Europe was not to colonize in "our" hemisphere. However, at the same time, we were also asserting our right to trade in the Eastern Hemisphere. Between 1870 and 1900 Europeans began gobbling up Africa and Asia. By 1900 many European powers were beginning to carve up China amongst themselves. The U.S. called for an "open door" policy to China that would ensure trade access to all countries who wanted to trade with China. Most European nations were cool to the idea. However, at the same time we continued to assert the Monroe Doctrine in regard to the Western Hemisphere. No Europeans allowed. One of the incentives to getting involved in foreign countries was the idea that it was the responsibility of the white man to take his culture and beliefs and share them with those who were less privileged. This was called the White man's burden. (Rudyard Kipling). In China this led to 100,000 converts in 1900 living among 400 million Chinese. But in 1900-01 China responded with the Boxer Rebellion, (the Boxers were a martial arts society in China), which tried to drive out all foreigners. Boxer=Righteous Harmonious Fist. Diplomats in China found refuge in the British embassy in Peking, but the Boxers put the embassy under siege. Thousands of Chinese converts, and 250 Missionaries were killed. In August 1900 an imperial expeditionary force
