Passage # 01 Psychological Theorists and Their Theorizations

Psychological theories that focus on mental structure, its functions, and development are known as structuralist theories. Structuralist theories attempt to describe the mind as a system of elements and their interactions. The most prominent structuralist theories are those of Wilhelm Wundt and Sigmund Freud. Wundt's theory of the mind is based on the idea of the mind as a system of elements and their interactions. Freud's theory of the mind is based on the idea of the mind as a system of elements and their interactions.

Passage # 02 Cognitive Processes: Perception, Memory, and Learning

Cognitive processes are fundamental to our understanding of how the mind works. Perception, memory, and learning are three key cognitive processes that allow us to interact with the world around us. Perception is the process by which we receive and interpret information from the environment. Memory is the process by which we store and retrieve information. Learning is the process by which we acquire new information and skills.
