PATHOGENESIS OF INTESTINAL INFECTIONS

Edited by
M. V. Voino-Yasenetsky
and T. Bakacs

This book is the result of long-standing Hungarian-Soviet collaboration in studies on basic problems of the pathogenesis of diarrhoeal infections, and those infections caused by Escherichia coli. The contributors, pathologists and microbiologists, discuss the basic principles of the disease as well as the different processes induced by pathogenic bacteria in man. The chief aim of the authors has been to find the most important links in the pathogenesis, i.e. to propose the mechanisms through which bacteria and the host interact with each other to produce intestinal infections. Special attention has been paid to the direct involvement of pathogenic agents and their role in aetiology and pathophysiology of various clinical forms. All available information on basic pathophysiology and clinical experience from early works up to the most recent ones has been considered critically in the light of the authors' own experience. General questions of the pathogenesis of infantile malnutrition are discussed in the introductory chapter, while other all-round approaches to the study of various infectious processes, including immunological ones, are discussed. The book is primarily intended for the specialist physician, microbiologist, pathologist and others engaged in the above problems, but may also be of interest to workers in other fields of infectious pathology.
