A Geopolitics Of Academic Writing A. Suresh Canagarajah,2002-12-15 A Geopolitics of Academic Writing critiques current scholarly publishing practices exposing the inequalities in the way academic knowledge is constructed and legitimized As a periphery scholar now working in and writing from the center Suresh Canagarajah is uniquely situated to demonstrate how and why contributions from Third World scholars are too often relegated to the perimeter of academic discourse He examines three broad conventions governing academic writing textual concerns matters of languages style tone and structure social customs the rituals governing the interactions of members of the academic community and publishing practices from submission protocols to photocopying and postage requirements Canagarajah argues that the dominance of Western conventions in scholarly communication leads directly to the marginalization or appropriation of the knowledge of Third World communities

Writing in the Academic Disciplines David R. Russell,2002 To understand the ways students learn to write we must go beyond the small and all too often marginalized component of the curriculum that treats writing explicitly and look at the broader though largely tacit traditions students encounter in the whole curriculum explains David R Russell in the introduction to this singular study The updated edition provides a comprehensive history of writing instruction outside general composition courses in American secondary and higher education from the founding public secondary schools and research universities in the 1870s through the spread of the writing across the curriculum movement in the 1980s through the WAC efforts in contemporary curriculums
