The present world population of about five billion and its projected growth create enormous pressures and demands for food and industrial raw materials It is to crop plants one of our precious few renewable resources that we must look to meet most of these needs Globally about 88% of our caloric requirements and 90% of our protein ultimately derive from plant sources ample evidence of their importance to humankind Our survival will therefore continue to depend on the world's largest and certainly most important industry agriculture Yet in spite of our long history of domestication and civilization the number of crop species involved in sustaining human life is strictly limited Essentially some twenty four crops protect us from starvation To know these basic food crop plants to study how they function and how their productivity may be improved is the first step in solving the world food problem The primary objectives in writing this book were to address this challenge and to review comprehensively the wealth of available yet scattered information on food crop productivity and processing Unlike several other texts and monographs in this field the present work was intended to give in a single volume a quick informative view of the various problems from field to table concerning the major food crops worldwide      Seed on the Wind Rex Stout, 1930
