Abstract: The evidence shows that the COVID-19 pandemic dramatically increased the number of urgent psychiatric consultations for children and adolescents in hospital emergency departments (EDs). However, what needs to be further investigated are the characteristics of psychiatric hospitalization in children and adolescents admitted to the Child and Adolescent Neuropsychiatry Unit wards in EDs. Specifically, this retrospective study aimed to examine changes in (i) the number of inpatients and (ii) the distribution of psychopathological disorders and self-injurious behaviors in our Child and Adolescent Neuropsychiatry Unit ward during the COVID-19 lockdown in Italy (March–June 2020; October 2020–January 2021) compared with the same months of previous years. We found a significantly lower number of inpatients during the first four quarantine months than the first four reference months and a higher number of inpatients during the second four quarantine months than the second four reference months. Additionally, we found an increased frequency of mood disorders, non-suicidal self-injurious behavior, and suicidal ideation during the COVID-19 lockdown compared to the reference periods. Our findings underline the need to develop psychological healthcare services for future emergency periods in order to identify and treat psychological distress in children and adolescents early, reducing the risk of psychiatric hospitalization.

1. Introduction

In March 2020, the novel coronavirus (i.e., COVID-19) pandemic forced the general population to engage with unprecedented social distancing and isolation measures in an effort to contain the infection. Worldwide, governments adopted strict lockdown measures to control the spread of the virus. Therefore, everyday habits and lifestyles were dramatically altered across familial, social, and professional spheres. This had a profound impact on the functioning of all individuals, regardless of their age, sex, and socio-economic status.

Research has shown that viral outbreaks and their associated quarantine measures tend to decrease psychosocial wellbeing. During the SARS CoV1 epidemic, for example, major anxiety and depression symptoms were found to be associated with a major risk of developing post-traumatic stress disorder and abusive conduct in young adults [1–3]. A number of studies [4–7] have reported a widespread presence of anxiety symptoms, mood deflection, and sleep disturbance in the general population during the COVID-19 pan-
