

ORAL PREMALIGNANCY

- Oral premalignancies are lesions which have a potential for malignant change.
- Various oral mucosal lesions particularly red lesion (erythroplasias) and some white lesions (leukoplakias) have a potential for malignant change.
- The risk of malignancy transformation is more common with erythroplakias. The most common white lesions have the lowest risk of malignant transformation.
- The best predictor of potential for malignant transformation is the degree of dysplasia(abnormal growth) seen histologically. For this reason, biopsy of red and white patches is mandatory.
